Ship-building gets 6-month reprieve

The 20 per cent subsidy for the Canadian ship-building industry due to expire on New Year's Eve has been extended another six months, Defence Minister Allan McKinnon said today.

At the Clark cabinet's final meeting about 10 days ago, an order-in-council was passed which extends the program to June 30. If the Tories are re-elected on Feb. 18, McKinnon said further consideration will be given then to another extension.

"It's very important to B.C.," the minister said in an interview.

"We'd like to see the industry stand on its own feet in international trade, but a lot of their competitors are being subsidized by their governments," he said.

"It's hard to compete against Japan and countries like that — Taiwan. Britain has almost gone out of the business.

"I think it's important to keep the West Coast ship-building industry."

The subsidy program was instituted several years ago by the Trudeau government, and was due to run out in February this year, but at that time then-finance minister Jean Chretien announced an initial extension to Dec. 31.

The open-ended subsidy program applies to any new vessel construction in Canadian shipyards, or to extensive repairs to existing ships.

McKinnon also hinted at a further boost to the ship-building industry. A proposal may soon be sent to the cabinet's treasury board for a commitment to the delex program — Destroyer Life Extension — where several hundred million dollars would be spent to upgrade the obsolete Canadian destroyer fleet.

"It's tied in with the frigate program," he said, referring to plans to build new navy vessels. The defence department still hasn't decided how many current destroyers should be "delexed" — whether 16 or a dozen or only 10 — but "now's the time to co-ordinate the two programs," he said.

"I don't want to 'delex' any more than we have to but I don't want to end up with a 10-ship navy either," said McKinnon. "Delexing" would add about 10 years to the life of a destroyer, he explained.

Don Challinor, general manager of the Victoria yard of Burrard-Yarrows, welcomed the news of the subsidy extension.

"It gives us a stay of execution, as it were."

There are 4,000 people working in the industry on this coast, half of them at Burrard-Yarrows, and without the subsidy few of them would be working today, he said.

McKinnon and Challinor couldn't say exactly how much money has been spent by Ottawa on the subsidy, but Challinor said it runs into "millions and millions of dollars" for his company.

He said the subsidy started out as a way of supporting Canadian shipyards while giving them an incentive to improve their productivity.

"It hasn't worked out that way," Challinor said.

Three per cent of the subsidy money is held in reserve and paid out only when the shipbuilder spends an equivalent amount of money on upgrading his shipyard.

Shipbuilders still need the subsidy to compete against foreign shipyards which are also subsidized by their governments.

Trudeau buying $300,000 home

MONTREAL (CP) — The president of a Montreal real estate company says Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau is involved in a deal to buy a house high on the southern slope of Mount Royal and valued at more than $300,000.

But if the deal goes ahead, Trudeau won't move in until 1983. The house, built by architect Ernest Cormier in 1931 and considered a masterpiece of Art Deco style, would be rented out to somebody else while it awaits the Liberal leader's arrival.

Frank Norman, head of Frank Norman Co. Ltd., said Thursday: "I've checked with Mr. Trudeau, and he has entered into a conditional agreement to buy the house.

"We are undertaking to place a tenant in it for three years. Just one tenant. It's a private home. To be accurate, it will be leased for three years. The agreement is subject to the architect's approval."

Cormier, now aged in his 90s, is the architect who designed the Supreme Court of Canada building in Ottawa, the main building of the University of Montreal, and the bas-reliefs on seven silver-plated nickel doors donated by Canada for the United Nations building in New York City.

The Art Deco home is the only house in the province classified complete with certain furnishings as a historic monument by the Quebec department of cultural affairs.

Norman said the asking price a year ago was "close to half a million dollars," but he refused to discuss the current selling price.

In September, playwright Jacques Beyderwellen, the present owner, was asking $325,000.

Even if the Liberals win the Feb. 18 election, the purchase appears to underline the promise Trudeau made to his three young children to move to Montreal. He has said he would form a government if the Grits win in February, but would eventually arrange a leadership convention with a view to retiring from politics in a couple of years.

"It was rather obvious that he loved the house," Norman said. "He couldn't use it right away, but he bought it with the idea of placing a tenant."

Real estate agent Alyce Lalonde said movie star Genevieve Bujold called on Christmas Day to say she was interested in buying the place, but Trudeau had already taken it.

The house has a 30 by 20 foot reception room with a 25-foot ceiling. It has a terrace overlooking the city, and a library with shelves installed by Cormier and dominated by huge bronze columns and a stylized stone carving above the fireplace.

Among other Cormier-designed furnishings are a 108-inch table in walnut root and macassar ebony, an octagonal table in Italian marble which is finished in black and gold, and a long circular staircase which leads down from a tower past lower floors to a basement garage.

Another flight of stairs leads to the guest wing and out to the "French-style garden" where there is a fountain. The wine cellar is built into the slope of the property.

"You need a certain lifestyle and a certain life to live in a house like that," said Ms. Lalonde.

Storms pound Britain

LONDON (UPI) — A deadly storm bringing hurricane-force winds and torrential rain pounded Britain's Atlantic seaboard Thursday, inundating scores of towns and villages in the worst flooding in 20 years, driving thousands from their homes and disrupting shipping and communications.

At least nine people were reported dead and one missing an feared dead.

Two old people died under a wall of water from a flooded brook that crashed down a mountain side and sent 10 feet of water smashing through a row of houses in Merthyr Tydfill in Wales.

Two girls and a man were killed by 126-km/h winds that swept their car off a coastal road near Milton in the southern county of Hampshire. A tree blown down by the gale struck and killed a passing motorcyclist in Exeter City.

Flooding that police called the worst since 1959 covered 12 counties in Wales and western England. South Wales was "utterly awash" and conditions in Devon and Cornwall were "diabolical and getting worse."

Gold hits $516

LONDON (AP) — Gold bullion soared to $516.00 U.S. ($593 Cdn.) a troy ounce in London and Zurich today.

But unlike Thursday when gold's advance sent the U.S. dollar reeling, the U.S. currency was steady to slightly higher on most European foreign exchanges.

Gold had surged $39 in Zurich Thursday from pre-holiday prices, closing at $514.00 an ounce and touching a record $518.50, in trading.

Monthly bus pass soon?

Monthly bus passes now sold in Kelowna may be the model for a bus pass for all B.C. transit systems, according to the Urban Transit Authority.

The UTA says in the December issue of its newsletter, Commuta, that Kelowna's pass "may become the model of a system to be introduced in other communities throughout the province."

Riders pay $18 a month for a pass permitting travel anywhere in Kelowna's eight-bus system, or $13 for a single-zone pass.

The Kelowna experiment began as a six-month pilot project in the summer of 1978. Besides the monthly passes, riders can also buy a $1 daily pass (75 cents for children) or a $7 book of tickets which can be used at any time in place of the regular fare.

Daily passes are bought direct from the driver and can be used by more than one person. The ticket books and monthly passes must be purchased from city hall or other retail outlets.

"The daily pass program is the most successful of the three experiments introduced by Kelowna transit," says the UTA. "The numbers of passes sold have increased considerably over the past year, especially during the summer months."

The passes could be in more general use in 1980 in other B.C. bus systems. UTA transit planner Denny Grimmer said Thursday a north-central B.C. community has already followed Kelowna's example.

But riders of the province's major bus networks in Victoria and Vancouver will have to wait at least until April when the regional districts assume responsibility for transit planning and financing.

Grimmer explained that fare-setting is the sole prerogative of the municipalities and regional districts responsible for planning and paying for the buses, but until formal authority passes from B.C. Hydro to the Capital Regional District on April 1, no decisions can be made.

Bus passes are a high priority with Mayor Bill Tindall, the city's representative on the UTA board of directors.

He said during the civic election campaign in November that he envisioned a monthly pass for the Victoria region costing about $20.

Kabul coup grim reminder of Prague pistol-whipping

Times News Services

Die-hard supporters of executed Afghan President Hafizullah Amin were reported trading rifle fire in Kabul today after Russian forces installed their own man in power to end a 19-month-old insurrection on the Soviet Union's southern border. The border guerrillas vowed to fight on.

There were signs the new leader, Babrak Karmal — described by Western sources as a Soviet stooge — will conduct large-scale purges.

Britain and West Germany condemned the Soviet involvement. A U.S. official called it "the grossest form of international behavior."

Meanwhile, the the Kremlin acknowledged for the first time today its military role in the upheaval in neighboring Afghanistan in a statement that bore striking similarities to Moscow's justification for its 1968 invasion of Czechoslovakia and occupation of its capital, Prague.

"It was the largest Soviet troop movement outside Eastern Europe since the Second World War," one source said of the influx of Russian soldiers. "You can see it almost as a Soviet invasion of Afghanistan."

The official Tass news agency quoted Kabul Radio as saying the Afghan government "made a pressing appeal to the U.S.S.R. for urgent political, moral and economic assistance, including military aid," and that the Russians "satisfied the request of the Afghan side" under the terms of a U.S.S.R.-Afghanistan friendship treaty signed Dec. 5, 1978.

A report from the Japanese embassy in Kabul said sporadic shots were heard near the road running from the Soviet embassy to the old royal palace which appeared to be still in the hands of Amin's followers. Several MiG-21 planes circled over the city, the report said.

Islamic rebels, who fought Amin, denounced Soviet influence in Afghanistan and vowed to continue their war aimed at establishing a non-Marxist government in Kabul.

The rebels view any Marxist government as a threat to the Moslem beliefs held by most Afghanis.

Both Moscow and the Marxist government in Kabul, the Afghan capital, claim the Moslem rebels in Afghanistan's civil war are backed by Pakistan, China and the United States.

The Kabul airport was believed closed, so there was no immediate way for correspondents to confirm reports of active Russian fighting to take over the presidential palace and radio station Thursday night.

Hope for crewmen dwindles

Times News Services

KETCHIKAN, Alaska — An elite U.S. navy diving team accompanied by a Chinese interpreter today set sail in a Coast Guard cutter in the stormy North Pacific in an attempt to reach the overturned freighter Lee Wang Zin and determine if any of its crew is still alive.

Cmdr. Bob Bornholdt, diving officer for the Navy's Pacific Fleet, said his 30-man team will bang on the hull of the capsized, 15,000-ton freighter and look through porthole windows to see whether any of the remaining 28 Taiwanese sailors trapped inside for three days had survived in an air bubble that has kept the vessel afloat.

Bornholdt and his men set sail at daybreak in the Coast Guard cutter Laurel for the three-hour ride to the overturned freighter.

The cutter "would roll around like a watermelon" in the 15-foot seas and 40-knot winds, said a crew member.

Hopes for survival of the crew faded further Thursday night as the air bubble keeping the ship afloat grew smaller.

The ship is reported settling lower in the water and leaking diesel fuel.

High winds have hit the area, and a storm is approaching. Winds are expected to remain strong, the National Weather Service said.

U.S. Coast Guard Cmdr. Ray Spoltman, federal on-scene co-ordinator, said the grounding of the freighter Thursday makes it easier for the divers to approach from calmer water on the vessel's lee side.

"The chance of surviving in this water is 10 minutes to an hour and a half," Spoltman said. "If there are air pockets, they (the crew) will be suffering from exposure.

"It's doubtful anyone can be alive. As time increases, it's becoming more remote we'll find anyone alive."

"Seas are breaking over the bow and stern," said Coast Guard Petty Officer Phillip Franklin. "She is aground on rocks about one-half mile from Kendrick Island," 40 miles southwest of Ketchikan.

Although beginning to lean, none of the vessel's deck was visible above the water, he said.

The bodies of two sailors were recovered floating near the ship, but the rest of the Taiwanese crew, including its registered captain, Hsu Pei Chieh, were thought to be inside the freighter.

Bornholdt, who flew over the ship in an effort to determine whether it could be entered by divers, reported that there was "not much bubble" left to keep it afloat. The vessel was settling lower in the sea, he said.

Travellers jam ferries

Thousands of mainlanders who spent Christmas on Vancouver Island jammed the Swartz Bay ferry terminal on Thursday hoping to get home quickly . . . they were disappointed.

Betty Nicholson of the B.C. Ferry Corporation said the pre-Christmas situation in which the Tsawwassen terminal was jammed while it was relatively quiet at Swartz Bay had changed.

On Thursday both terminals were plugged, with travellers forced to wait three or four sailings before finally getting aboard a ferry.

Nicholson said that while the Horseshoe Bay and Departure Bay terminals were quiet for much of Thursday, traffic began to back up in the afternoon as travellers realized the situation was bad at Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen. But at most there was only a one-sailing wait at the northern terminals.

"I don't think it will be as bad on the weekend. It certainly shouldn't be as bad as the last two days."

Nicholson said this morning there was a possible one-sailing wait at Swartz Bay and none at Tsawwassen.

She said there are sailings every hour on the hour, and once aboard, travellers on all ships between Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen, except for the Queen of Saanich, can enjoy a special holiday buffet meal aboard from today until Monday.

Anyone wanting to make sure he won't get stuck in a long lineup can phone the B.C. Ferry information line at 386-3431, or check Cable 10 TV for updated reports on ferry traffic.

Nicholson also cleared up the mystery surrounding the interrupted service on the Mill Bay-Brentwood Bay ferry on Boxing Day.

Motorists who arrived for the 5:15 p.m. sailing from Mill Bay discovered a sign saying service was cancelled for the remainder of the day.

If they had waited, however, the ferry came over from Brentwood and the final run, scheduled for 6:20 p.m., was made on time.

Nicholson said the ferry had developed clutch problems early on Boxing Day. It was decided to fix the problem, but the crew didn't know whether they'd make it back to Mill Bay for the last two sailings, so the sign was posted just before the 4:10 p.m. sailing.

11-13% food price hike seen in '80

TORONTO (CP) — Retail food prices will increase between 11.5 and 13.5 per cent in 1980, the Retail Council of Canada said Thursday.

In its annual report, the council predicted jumps in the price of beef, imported produce and processed foods, but said ample supplies of pork and poultry should be available at relatively low prices.

An anticipated 15-per-cent rise in beef prices will be due to lack of supply, caused by a slow rate of herd growth due to high interest rates, the report said. Higher transportation and farm operating costs, as well as more expensive fertilizer will increase the price of imported produce and the report anticipates that escalating costs of production, processing, packaging and labor will drive up the cost of processed foods.

The forecast rise in retail food prices matches the 13.5-per-cent increase registered in 1979 but is lower than the record 17.8-per-cent rise in food costs experienced by consumers in 1978.

THE OUTCASTS — by Ben Wicks

Ship's air bubble shrinks slight flicker of hope that there's people alive in there," he said before the diving team embarked.

The crew was housed in the freighter's aft section when a Christmas Day storm rolled it over. With the exception of two men who were walking the deck when huge waves and wind struck, all were probably in their quarters, said Bornholdt.

"When you have a vessel capsize, it's really hard to tell if there's air or not," added Franklin. "There would have to be air to float. But she's aground right now . . . looking at the bottom of the boat, it is like when you have a coffee pot with a pan of water — you don't know how much air is in there."

Diesel oil from the ship spread over 100 square miles of ocean, and major oil-spill equipment was being brought to the scene from Seattle by the cutter Munro, which also has a large sick bay, Spoltman said.

Officials say they have no estimates of how much of the estimated 370,000 gallons of oil already had leaked, but Spoltman said the amount of oil believed to be on board posed a major threat to the marine environment. As of Thursday night, the oil slick appeared to be moving out to sea and was breaking up in heavy weather.

The crew of the coast guard cutter Clover recovered a body and brought it to Ketchikan.

A body recovered earlier remained aboard the tugboat Cindy Mozel of Prince Rupert, which was joined by the Canadian Coast Guard cutter Alexander Mackenzie in keeping watch over the Lee Wang Zin through the night.

The ship is owned and registered in Panama and leased to Japanese interests.

An official said it appeared the vessel was carrying about 300,000 gallons of heavy diesel, rather than Bunker C oil as previously believed, in addition to 70,000 gallons of lighter diesel.

He said the ship's owners had disclaimed responsibility for cleaning up the oil spill and weren't interested in salvaging the hulk. The U.S. government might sue to recover clean-up costs.

But witnesses said in telephone calls to diplomats in New Delhi, India, the Russians fought Afghan soldiers guarding Radio Kabul, knocked out two Afghan tanks, captured the station and took soldiers prisoner in 3½ hours of battles that ended late last night with MiG-21 planes criss-crossing the skies.

They described Kabul as quiet but tense today with morning traffic resuming unimpeded by Russian soldiers.

The coup was the third in 20 months.

Amin, the man he replaced, also was a pro-Soviet Communist who grabbed power in a palace shootout in September that killed his pro-Soviet predecessor, Nur Mohammed Taraki. But Radio Kabul said Amin was executed almost immediately after Thursday's coup on orders of a revolutionary tribunal for "crimes against the people of Afghanistan."

The broadcast also said members of Amin's family were killed and that those "responsible for crimes committed against the people by members of Amin's fascist regime will be brought to justice," indicating bloody, mass purges will take place in the next few days in the Afghan capital.

A recent U.S. intelligence appraisal said that, although Amin welcomed Soviet help in putting down Afghanistan's Moslem rebels, he wanted his nation to remain a truly independent state.

Moslems are expected to make up a majority of the Soviet population within the [illegible] as and the Russians apparently fear if the Moslems in Afghanistan and Iran have their way there will be a "ripple effect" of unrest among restive Soviet Moslems.

Karmal, the new president, has spent the last 18 months in political exile.

Construction site abuses denied

VANCOUVER (CP) — Allegations of prostitution and drug abuse, cost over-runs and other improprieties on a northeastern British Columbia construction site "were unfounded or grossly exaggerated" says a Dillingham Corp. inquiry committee.

Dillingham set up its own inquiry in October after a Wackenhut of Canada investigation, commissioned by Dillingham, uncovered allegations of wrongdoing on the construction site of a gas processing plant being built for Westcoast Transmission at Pine River, near Chetwynd.

Workers at the site were swamped with calls from home when the Wackenhut findings were revealed.

Wackenhut reported one cost over-run of $100,000 for an excavating job and alcohol bribes to a foreman in exchange for falsifying work records allowing employees to collect double-time pay without showing up for work.

Wackenhut withdrew from the investigation after making its report. The security company said neither Dillingham nor Westcoast were doing anything about the allegations.

Both companies denied that charge and Dillingham immediately established an internal inquiry headed by Gerald Hobbs, chairman of Cominco and a Dillingham of Honolulu board member; Thomas Ladner and Wilfred Borrie, directors of Dillingham Canada; and George Paquette, a retired RCMP investigator.

For more than two months, the committee investigated the charges and decided "allegations of widespread and organized prostitution and rampant drug use are completely unfounded," Dillingham said in a news release Thursday.

"After a detailed investigation, the committee has concluded most of the allegations were either unsubstantiated, inaccurate, grossly exaggerated or misleading."

Forest revenue up, reforestation down

The provincial forest ministry's latest annual report shows the government got substantially more money from the industry in 1978 than 1977, more wood was logged from less land, and there was a drop in reforestation.

Traditionally released almost a year late, figures in the 1978 annual report showed the ministry received a 121-per cent increase in direct revenue over the previous year, or $184 million compared with $83 million in 1977.

The industry harvested an average of 14 per cent more wood, logging 26,544,170 cunits of timber from 410,379 acres of land in B.C. in 1978, compared with 24,709,629 cunits logged from 434,771 acres in 1977.

A cunit is 100 cubic feet of timber, or about the size of an average utility pole.

There was also a 10-per-cent decrease in reforestation in 1978. The report says about 60 million seedlings were planted compared with 66 million in 1977.

It attributes the drop to unavailability of stock because of frost damage and a shortage of prepared sites.

One year extension for oil pipe bid

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) — Northern Tier Pipeline Co. has been given a year's extension on its bid to convince Washington state to authorize a multi-million dollar oil port and pipeline to the United States Midwest.

With not a day to spare, the Washington Energy Facility Site Evaluation Council agreed to yet another extension in the protracted discussions over the energy package.

Northern Tier, a Montana-based consortium, asked the council on July 26, 1976, to approve the project. After numerous delays, some caused by the company's decision to re-route the proposed pipeline, the council had faced a Thursday deadline to make a decision.

The problem was that the formal contested case hearing does not convene in Olympia until next Thursday. So under provisions of state law, the council accepted Northern Tier's motion for another year's extension.

"We're optimistic that the contested case will be over in four to five months and that the council will be able to reach a decision quickly after that," said council spokesman Bill Fitch.

The council also is considering a rival pipeline and oil port proposal by Trans Mountain Pipe Line Corp.

Rail talks halt again

VANCOUVER (CP) — Contract negotiations between the Council of Railway Unions and strike-bound British Columbia Railway halted Thursday with no indication of when talks will resume.

The two sides met with Don Munro, chairman of the provincial Labor Relations Board, but failed to make any headway. The Crown-owned railway has been shut down since Dec. 18.

Victim identified

NANAIMO (CP) — Jason Alder Scott, 45, was identified Thursday as the second victim of a Christmas Eve double murder here.

RCMP said Scott and Ethinia Mary Lynn, 47, were shot in the driveway of the woman's home.

Man's body found

CHILLIWACK (CP) — RCMP in this Fraser Valley community said Thursday a man murdered some time ago has been identified as Victor Nolan, 30, of no fixed address.

His body was recovered from the south bank of the Fraser River on Christmas Day. Police said he had been shot in the head and stomach and they speculated the slaying occurred upstream about two months ago.

Suspension upheld

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Registered Psychiatric Nurses Association of British Columbia acted in a proper manner when it suspended a member after a Riverview Hospital patient was fatally scalded in a bath tub, the Labor Relations Board said Thursday.

Caught in the aftermath

Socred MLA Bill Ritchie has been victimized by the system. He has neither been exonerated, nor condemned by the powers that be, but has ended up with a cloud overhimself that could disrupt his political career.

The marvellous thing about a democracy is the separation of legislative and judicial powers. The justice system is the interpreter and arbitrator of the laws enacted by the representatives of the people. But when the lines of authority appear to cross, the democratic system suffers, and in this case one man's career is threatened by the aftermath.

Crown counsel and the RCMP had recommended that charges be laid against Ritchie for using his position on the B.C. Land Commission to bribe a prominent Fraser Valley Socred into supporting his nomination as a candidate in the last provincial election.

The case was referred to Deputy Attorney-General Neil McDiarmid who disagreed with the recommendations, saying there wasn't the evidence to support the charge. He declared that Ritchie had been cleared of allegations of influence peddling.

A few days later, the public learns of the difference of opinion between Crown counsel and McDiarmid. The public is further told that the McDiarmid's decision was not influenced by the Attorney-General Allan Williams. However, Williams did say he agreed with the decision not to proceed with the charges.

There is no reason to believe that McDiarmid was not acting with the best professional intent. But suspicions hang heavy that because Ritchie is a member of the government in power, somehow politics got mixed up in what should have been a routine decision by the appropriate civil authorities.

Had the fact that the recommendation was overturned not been revealed nobody would have suspected that justice had not been served. But that is not the case.

The system demands that the media reveal the truth where its found. It also demands that charges against an individual not be laid unless there is sufficient evidence. Everybody played their part. Unfortunately the by-product in this instance, other than suspicions of inappropriate political meddling, has damaged an individual's reputation without him ever appearing in a court.

Elections without parkas

If weather was a consideration, there could be no worse timing for a federal election than mid-February.

With the exception of those living in some coastal regions of the country, many are faced with the prospect of making their way to the polls through a raging winter storm. Concern has been expressed from the far north over the lack of options for people who may simply be unable to travel on election day.

Although little can be done during this election for Canadians faced with inclement weather on voting day, Canadian Cablesystems Ltd. of Ontario is breaking new ice in a technological area that may solve the problem in the future.

On December 17, the company conducted an experiment with a device called an interactive communication system. Roughly translated, that's a two-way signalling machine. Special terminals were installed in 165 cable TV subscribers, homes in London. The homeowners were asked to participate in an opinion poll.

Instead of recording their answers on a piece of paper, they pressed buttons on the special terminals and the information was transmitted to the cable company's computer. The computer then tabulated the results.

Without leaving their homes, these people were able, in effect, to cast their ballot. It's certainly easier than trudging through snow and ice.

As you might expect, one of the questions asked was how will you vote in the coming federal election. Of the 135 people who participated 36 per cent said they would vote Liberal, 28 per cent NDP, 23 per cent Conservative and 13 per cent were undecided. The experiment took place within a predominantly Liberal riding.

Ideas distinguish parties

OTTAWA — First Person: "Pierre Trudeau, Joe Clark and Ed Broadbent are dressed up as Santa Clauses. How d'ya tell which one is Clark?"

Second Person: "How?"

First Person: "He's the one handing out the Easter eggs."

In Toronto most particularly, Clark jokes are being used as a substitute for wit in the way that Newfie jokes used to be.

The Liberals count upon these Clark jokes, or the so-called Wimp Factor, to win them the election.

The Liberals may well be right. Certainly my purpose in telling that tackly Clark joke isn't to cast doubts upon the Liberal election strategy but rather to cast doubts upon my own analysis of the election ideology.

Ideas might count

A fragile and a fleeting possibility exists that, for the first time, an election will be decided by political ideas rather than by personality images.

Probably not. The TV cameras do our thinking for us, and they focus only on personalities not upon ideas.

Still, in this time of good-will, let's dream that ideas may matter.

Canadians will be asked in this election to express their opinions about two distinct and opposed ideas. The first idea proceeds from the premise that it is the responsibility of citizens to do things for themselves. The defining premise of the second idea is that it is the responsibility of the state to do things for its citizens.

These ideas differ only at their starting point. Further on, at the stage of political reality, all parties espouse policies, and accompanying rhetoric, that treat as sacred both state responsibility and individual responsibility.

To get specific, although the Conservative backbenches are blue, Clark's cabinet is dappled with Red and Pink Tories. Liberals may lean a little to the left, but Robert Andras, a likely future Liberal Finance Minister, called recently for "responsible if unpopular action" to cut the budget deficit. The New Democrats are decidedly left, yet Winnipeg MP Bill Blaikie has called them, "the true conservatives," because they are dedicated to "conserving what is valuable and good . . . (from) the self-interest of the economically powerful."

Yet, as is quite abnormal of us, ideas have raised their ugly heads in this election: to the right are the Conservatives (where they were not when led by John Diefenbaker and by Robert Stanfield); to the left are the Liberals (don't count on them to stay there) and the NDP (forever).

The right-wing populist tilt of the Conservatives has been evident for some time. It's the leftwards lean of the Liberals that is new.

After the election defeat, the Liberals changed direction. The National Executive blamed the defeat on Trudeau's failure to make promises, such as a home shelter plan.

Oil policy is a litmus test for the difference between the parties. The Conservative 18 cents a gallon excise tax would make individuals responsible for conservation. The Liberals, by eliminating the tax, would make the state responsible — through higher deficit. As well, the eventual alternative to price conservation is rationing.

PetroCanada is another test. The Conservatives would make individual Canadians part-owners, as share holders. The Liberals would maintain it as a state corporation of which Canadians are collective owners.

Likewise the budget. By raising taxes, the Conservatives would compel Canadians to contribute to lowering the deficit. By postponing tax increases, the Liberals would accept a larger deficit, but would use this "stimulative deficit" to create jobs.

Nothing engraved

These are the choices. The details aren't distinct. Once in power again, the Liberals no doubt would change; the Conservatives already have changed their policy on PetroCanada. But the directions, toward state responsibility or toward individual responsibility, are clear.

Whichever choice we make Clark jokes themselves will disappear. If he wins, he'll be taken seriously. If he loses he'll disappear himself.

All that will be left to us then will be "lightbulb" jokes. As in:

First Person: "How many newspaper columnists does it take to change a lightbulb?"

Second Person: "How many?"

First Person: "Three. Two to mix the martinis and one to call the building superintendant."

Challenge facing the West

NEW YORK — This holiday season, the scarcest commodity is probably not oil but hope. For, with the turbulent decade of the 1970s in its final days, the dangers facing the world economy — and world peace — are intensifying. The Iranian crisis is on the verge of triggering economic war, or worse, between United States and Iran. But even if the Iranian situation should settle down, new threats to the supply of oil vitally needed by the industrial and oil-poor developing countries will still lie ahead.

The outcome of the meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in Caracas, Venezuela, far from restoring some semblance of order to the chaotic world market, has compounded it; every producing country can now charge whatever it wants. All have learned to squeeze supplies, drive up spot market prices, and then boost contract prices and terms.

Companies squeezed

France, Germany, Japan, Sweden and other importing countries are rushing to set up their own deals with oil producers. Over five million barrels a day are now moving in government-to-government deals. The United States is still letting oil companies handle procurement, but the oil companies are being steadily choked off. As one big international oil dealer, Harry Neustein, puts it, "the major oil companies will soon be the minors."

Political instability in many of the oil-producing countries worsens the dangers to the United States and its industries. The United States has been cast in the role of imperialist aggressor, not only by militant Moslems like the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini but by left-wing radicals. Anti-American rhetoric and demonstrations have broken out in places as far apart as the Philippines and Pakistan.

Speaking of the oil-producing countries, Prof. M. A. Adelman, MIT's leading authority on the world oil trade, says: "We have no hold or leverage on them. They are nearly all undemocratic regimes, who [illegible] can only replace the Ins by violence and conspiracy. Hence to be friendly with the Ins makes the Outs your deadly enemy. More shocks of the Iranian type are to be expected." Political violence could strike elsewhere at any time. Denis Healey, Britain's former chancellor of the exchequer, observes in the current issue of "Foreign Affairs," that the problem involves not just Iran but other Middle Eastern countries. Sectarian divisions between Sunni and Shiite Moslem sects are already posing strains in Bahrain and other countries. And ever present is the danger of another Arab-Israeli war.

The oil squeeze is worsening inflation throughout the world and choking back the growth of the industrial countries. There is danger, Healey warns, that if social and political strains increase in the consumer countries, or if OPEC goes too far in exploiting its monopoly position, particularly for political objectives, "then some external intervention in the oil-supplying countries may occur, and intervention which might bring Western countries into direct conflict with the Soviet Union."

James Schlesinger, the former United States secretary of energy, has been warning that a Soviet takeover of the oil supplies of the Persian Gulf, whether by military action or subversion, could wreck the Western alliance. Schlesinger recently told a group of financial people in New York that the Europeans and Japanese, with a 70 per cent dependency on that region for energy, would have to seek accommodation with the Russians. United States strategy based on the so-called "northern tier" countries of Iran, Turkey and Pakistan, designed to prevent the Soviet Union from reaching down into the Persian Gulf, has now been undermined, especially by the Iranian revolution.

The worst effects of the oil squeeze on the world monetary system has not yet been felt. Severe dangers lie ahead in the next few years. Oil-poor developing countries already owe $190 billion to multinational banks, 70 per cent of which debts will have to be refinanced or repaid by 1982. This total does not count the $125 billion Third World countries owe to national governments and international bodies such as the World Bank. The Third World's oil deficits, according to H. Johannes Witteveen, the former head of International Monetary Fund, could be as much as $65 billion in 1980; the inability of private banking institutions to finance those deficits could produce a major financial crisis, which might sweep through the entire monetary system.

Policies needed

Can the West get itself together in time to avoid a catastrophe? "One can only hope that governments will at least look at the facts of the situation as it develops and reconsider their policies — or lack [illegible] them — if they are visibly failing to improve the situation," says Healey. "The survivors of the Second World War did so, and in three years of confident inspiration constructed our international system which brought unprecedented benefits to the whole of the free world. We desperately need some glimmer of that inspiration today."

On the other hand, during the years of depression that preceded the Second World War, the countries of the West found no such inspiration, and tragedy ensued.

A solution

Those of us who have been reading the news lately will agree that the situation resulting from the detention of 50 remaining hostages in the American embassy in Tehran by the Iranian authorities constitutes a potentially explosive situation.

I cannot help wondering, however, if the Ayatollah Khomeini and the Iranian administration are following the right course. Assuming the charges against the former Shah of Iran and his government are correct and there are witnesses, would it not be better if they proceeded as follows.

First, contact the publishers of the world's leading newspapers, saying the Iranian government wished to make a statement on the hostage situation and they wanted as broad a coverage as possible. This statement could catalogue the excesses and crimes for which they hold the Shah responsible. They could then declare that, if they had the opportunity, the Shah would be placed on trial either in Iran or under jurisdiction of a world court, to answer such charges. A promise of publication of the statement by the aforementioned newspapers could be a condition of freeing the remaining hostages. This might be acceptable by the United States, in view of their previous participation in the Nuremburg trials and certain sentiments expressed on the Statue of Liberty and in the American Constitution.

This would not only defuse a dangerous situation, but possibly result in increased respect and sympathy for Iran and her citizens.

If the Iranian authorities explained to their people that, if there was a negative response to this proposal, at least they had the satisfaction of stating their case and any country giving shelter to the Shah would then be tactily declaring itself an accomplice.

They might also say they intended to devote their talent and energy to the reconstruction of the Iranian economy, thereby creating a favorable image in the mind of the average Iranian citizen. — Leslie A. Priestley, 5-1321 Broad Street.

There you have it

In David Copperfield it is said that "accidents will occur in the best regulated families", which may be as close as we can get to explaining how it is that this country finds itself in an unwanted election in mid-February. I feel certain that none of the opposition parties really desired one, for it can only rebound to the advantage of a government, which, until its defeat, had been getting close to complete discredit with the general public.

My guess is that the Social Credit party never suspected that the government might fall or they certainly would have been on hand to try to prevent it, for they are the one group likely to suffer most in the coming election if, indeed, they are not completely wiped out. Mr. Broadbent, too, must have assumed that, as had been the case last time, a number of Liberals would absent themselves from the House when the vote was called. Otherwise, how can his amendment to the Liberal non-confidence motion be explained? Had he proposed an NDP amendment with social democratic overtones, the Liberals would have voted against it and the present mess could have been avoided. As to the Liberals it seems that by the end of their Christmas party, their spirits had risen to the point where they were prepared to take on the world, the flesh and the devil. Otherwise, how can their death wish vote be explained?

So there you have it and it now looks as though the Conservatives will win because of voters' repugnance to a February election is even greater than their distaste for Joe Clark. My own hope is that the electorate, having had a long and painful experience with Pierre Trudeau and a long enough, but equally painful, look at the present prime minister, they might decide to give increased support to the third man. For far too long Canadians have been like the office manager who fires his office boy, finds the second one equally unsatisfactory, so rehires the first. — F.L.P Anderson, 409-2174 Cadboro Road.

Tough job

On behalf of the Board of Trustees of the Royal Jubilee Hospital, may I express our sincere appreciation to Mr. John Clark for a job "well done" in his capacity as Acting Executive Director of the hospital during the past six months.

The board is aware of the tremendous responsibility suddenly thrust upon Mr. Clark with the unexpected retirement of the then Executive Director Dr. A. C. Pickles, due to reasons of ill health.

We also recognize that he could not have carried the load alone, therefore great credit is given to administration, department managers, and hospital staff.

To all, we say "thank you" for the continuance of excellent health care of the patients in the Royal Jubilee Hospital during a very difficult period of reorganization within the hospital. — Eric Simmons, Chairman, Board of Trustees, Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Service working

Congratulations to the Times for initiating a weekly "Volunteering" column, listing the opportunities available through the Victoria Volunteer Bureau.

Our office has greatly benefitted from the contributions of enthusiastic and well-qualified volunteers, who have been recruited by the Volunteer Bureau. Working with volunteers has been a rewarding and enriching experience for us, as it has been for the volunteers. — Constance Hawley, B.C. Council for the Family.

Measure energy

On May 22 Canadian voters exercised their democratic right to elect candidates of their choice, which resulted in a parliament comprised of four political parties and a minority Conservative government. For almost five months government was non-existent and on Oct. 11 Parliament was called into session. On Dec. 13 Canadians witnessed both the working of the democratic process and the failure of the democratic political system to provide functional control to manage the problems encountered by a high-energy consuming nation facing reduced petroleum supplies.

The defeat of the government's budget resulted from their complete disregard of a scientific study over seven years on Canada's energy resources, present and future, that considers all options that are feasible. The final publication, Energy Futures for Canadians — June 1978, concluded that Canada could possibly become energy independent by the year 2025. By being ignorant of or completely disregarding the report, the government set a target date for energy independence in the year 1990, 35 years in advance of the most probable date. Developing their budgetary needs and restraints to such an unrealistic target date and refusing any amendments to it, their dictatorial stance resulted in their own defeat.

Now the Canadian voters can again exercise their democratic rights on February 18th. After the Christmas turkey has been depleted and before casting their ballots the voters should reflect on the happenings that have taken place in the political arena and ask themselves "for what do I vote?" Is it not time in this period, before blindly casting a ballot, to seriously evaluate the justification for retaining the political economic system in light of its record of performance in solving technical problems that are now aggravated by the necessity to reduce dependence on petroleum and reduce its consumption.

To adjust to reduced energy supplies requires the ability to measure the energy invested in each physical process and end product. This energy consumed cannot be adequately measured when it is only reflected in the cost expressed in monetary terms relating to profit and selling price.

Conservation can only be accomplished by costing in terms of watts of energy.

If we can make the transition to energy accounting and pricing then it will be followed by the natural process of abolishing money interference in the physical production and distribution of the goods and services to all our people. — J. J. Gibson, 103-260 Michigan Street.

Stopping a buck

I have just paid my last B.C. Hydro bill, minus one dollar. The unpaid one dollar is a form of protest against the unnecessary and unwanted junk mail Hydro is printing at my expense.

I have returned to Hydro chairman Robert Bonner his unasked for literature for the following reasons:

1. If I want political leaflets about Confederation or any other subject I will join a political party.
2. If I want to know about projects benefitting fish, I will buy a newspaper.
3. If I want to learn about energy conservation, I will go to the library.

I do not want anything from an electric company but reliable, uninterrupted service at the lowest possible prices, neither of which I am receiving lately. It might be the first step in the right direction if Hydro would reduce the so-called "basic charge" by one dollar and stop shoving propaganda down the throat of its consumers. — Geza Benko, 2512 Scott Street.

In his letter Dec. 17 (Game Declining) Cyril Shelford concludes, I am sure with all sincerity, that game is dying out altogether in the Nechako Reservoir and Tweedsmuir Park because the Fish and Wildlife Branch has not killed wolves. Previous and present ministers he infers have either bowed to public pressure or refused funds for the job — perhaps again due to public pressure or stinginess.

I find it difficult to believe that wolves can permanently eradicate wild game from any large area. I will concede they can do continuous damage to domestic cattle — but that is a different problem. I have always been taught that as stocks of game get low wolves die off and when wolf stocks are low the stocks of game revive and stronger than ever, for only the fittest survive a former build up of predators, and such a cycle has been going on since long before the ice ages.

Low years for game are hard luck for the hunter, and in the past much harder on the natives who often had to starve if they couldn't make it to another area. An extra cold winter or dry summer, or a man-made environmental change can bring hardships to the predator. Certainly in the past both wolves and humans have slaughtered enormous quantities of caribou without any serious long-term damage. Man killed wolves too, but in reasonable numbers.

I, of course cannot know for sure why there is so little game, but if Mr. Shelford is correct, the wolves are in for a hard winter unless they migrate to cattle-raising areas. The only people who are likely to know what is really going on are the naturalists working for the Fish and Wildlife Branch and if I or Mr. Shelford went to the trouble of writing or even phoning them, I am sure we would get all the information we need.

Mr. Shelford might learn that Jack Radford, Sam Bawlf and Rafe Mair had really no affect one way or the other on the game count of the province. I am personally satisfied these are all able men who listen to professional advice from naturalists rather than from pressure groups, be they hunters, cattlemen, politicians, bleeding hearts, or the media.

What we need is an in-depth article by a naturalist. Not a letter from a politician with an axe to grind — even though it is possible he may be right. — Monica Oldlam, 511 Victoria Avenue.

Time for change

I am very annoyed that our Conservative government has brought about another election at this time. I believe it was all very carefully orchestrated on Mr. Clark's part. He knew the budget would be unacceptable to both the Liberals and the NDP. He made no attempt to discuss or work things out with either party. As he said, he was going to rule as though he had a majority — a rather irresponsible attitude. Mr. Clark claims he was surprised at the results of the vote in the House, but he had a smug little smile on his face when the results were announced. After all, he knew his party was in the best shape for an election, with the Liberals leaderless and the NDP in debt from the last election.

Trudeau was an arrogant leader, Clark is a bull-headed leader; now I think it's time we had a responsible leader. Let's put Ed Broadbent in control. — Verna Stone, 126 B. South Turner Street.

An example?

In May of 1972 a provincial inquiry was in progress. The objective of the inquiry was to discover a better way to deal with sewage and garbage disposal. The need for regional input was recognized and to some degree encouraged.

In a brief submitted by the Union of B.C. Municipalities (UBCM) pollution control was recognized as one "of the most urgent requirements of all levels of government" and "almost all types of pollution affects more than one municipality or local area." The brief also stated that "pollution control measures should be based on certain results in the receiving water." To meet these recommendations our Regional Board continued to dump sewage into the ocean and beaches were closed this summer.

The UBCM recommended that regional boards be set up to be better able to "attack" the problem of pollution. With this type of regional control it was felt that each area would be able to assess and make the best recommendations for the region. It was also recommended that these regional authorities have "over-all power" to regulate, plan and control the assault on pollution. Our Capital Regional Board has met this challenge by approving the extension of the Clover Pt. outfall.

As we approach 1980 pollution is still a major problem for our province. We still have sewage and garbage disposal problems, we still have bad logging practices, we still have management of our resources after we use more than our needs dictate. Federal tax dollars are now being used to clean rivers, etc. that we have polluted so salmon can be reintroduced and the salmon fishery can survive. In the face of all this, one would think the responsible decision would be to protect our oceans. Instead members of our regional board state that present sewage disposal methods will not be changed and there will be no treatment plant in the Capital Region unless one is ordered by the Pollution Control Board. We wonder, is this an example of the "over-all power" the UBCM envisioned seven years ago? We also understood that it was up to the regional board to make recommendations to the Pollution Control Board and ask for financial help to implement the recommendations.

Environmentalists are always accused of being fiscally irresponsible or worse. Certainly prevention is expensive, but not nearly as expensive as clean-up projects in the future will be. We cannot accept that "fiscal responsibility" applies to a one-year period because our tax dollars not only pay for the outfall extension, but will also pay for the inevitable clean-up projects.

Already there

On November 22 there was an article on "street kids" which said that a drop-in centre was much needed for street children.

As I teach a course in "kitchen kraft" at the Boys' and Girls' Club at 1240 Yates Street, I would like to point out that we already have one. Try it. 383-1101. Ask for Peter. — May Robinson, 20A Hibberson Crescent.

Memories of home

STRAY FEATHERS
Harold Hosford

Thanks to a recent book by Deidre Griffiths, I've been thinking a lot about home lately. No, despite a growing love affair with Victoria, and despite the fact that I've made it my home for the time being, Victoria is not "home" — Manitoba is, and always will be.

In this respect I'm probably not much different than any other Victorian who wasn't born here; their real "home" is always where they grew up.

But I digress; I wanted to talk about Deidre Griffiths' book and how it made home seem much closer at a season when home is often in the minds of many voluntary exiles.

By now you're probably thinking that Griffiths' book is about Manitoba; it isn't. It's about Alberta, northern Alberta — more particularly Elk Island National Park. What brings memories of Manitoba surging to mind as I read the book is that the country Griffiths writes about is typical of a narrow band of similar country that runs from southeastern Manitoba to northeastern British Columbia. And anybody who has ever lived there, whether they be British Columbians or Manitobans, will recognize it as the parklands, that strip of aspen on the northern edge of the grasslands and which gradually blends into the cold spruce forests of the far north.

Griffiths' book — Island Forest Year, Elk Island National Park, to give it its full title — is set in this transition zone, and while the country she writes about is 400 miles north of the parklands I knew, the patterns of continental climate make it much like what I call home.

Griffiths was chief naturalist at Elk Island National Park for more than three years, and her book is a chronicle of one of those years, a chronicle of days and nights and changing seasons, of fair days and foul days, of a year that anyone interested in nature and who has lived in the parklands will know well.

The dust-jacket says it is a voyage of discovery; for me it was a voyage of rediscovery because nearly all the events Griffiths describes — and the emotions they evoked — are events and emotions I have known.

The book is arranged by months, with, as might be expected, the heaviest emphasis on summer. But winter is not forgotten. It was in one of her references to a day in late winter that brought back memories and emotions only someone who has experienced a fullblooded Canadian winter can really comprehend. I quote it here in the belief that, as you think about it, the passage will do for you what it did for me:

"Today is cloudless and windless. In the afternoon heat I take off my mitts, throw back my parka hood, and open the zipper. The snow is soft and packs readily into balls which splatter against the long-suffering trees. My aim is not good, but the targets are endless. Besides, it is the spirit that counts. Winter is on its way out and I yearn to speed its departure."

"I yearn to speed it on its way." Oh how I yearned to speed winter on its way, particularly on one of those days when the bright March sun, the first thaw, and the distant tinkle of a Horned Lark teased me into thinking winter was over. Oh, how often it was not; how often such weather was little more than a prelude to a new outburst from winter.

In Elk Island National Park, Deirdre Griffiths recounts the rebound of winter, the temporary disappointment, the long wait, and finally the full burst of spring when it came at last.

And spring — the reluctant season — is described as it is on the northern plains, a rush of events and emotions so bewildering and overpowering in their variety that they produce an almost frantic delight trying to keep up with them.

There may be a lot of things about life on the prairies I'd like to forget, but many that I'd like to remember, fondly, are among the experiences of Deirdre Griffiths in Island Forest Year, Elk Island National Park. For $12.50 you can enjoy those same experiences, and memories, if you're a transplanted prairieite.

Energy example

THE SUN

Jack Davis, B.C.'s energy-minister-in-exile, has beaten his successors to the punch. As the energy ministry grapples with the 10th (or is it 11th?) draft of the long-promised comprehensive provincial energy policy, Mr. Davis has issued one of his own.

Entitled "Some Thoughts on Energy Policy," Mr. Davis' concise three-page document is largely a dose of common sense. It includes suggestions for making natural gas available to as many consumers as possible and using it to replace oil as much as possible; increased research into synthetic fuels and the use of coal and wood wastes; opposition to projects that encourage imports of off-shore oil; exporting energy only when it is surplus to B.C. requirements or when the result upgrades resources that would otherwise go to waste. There is more, but that is the flavor of it.

In passing over Mr. Davis in his recent cabinet shuffle, Premier Bill Bennett let it be known that he has not forgiven his former minister's transgressions with airline tickets — even though Mr. Davis paid his penalty for a sin that doesn't rank as low as some on the scale of dirty tricks, and was considered by the voters of North Vancouver-Seymour last May to have been rehabilitated.

Since his re-election, Mr. Davis has been doing what a good backbencher should do: speaking out on matters that concern him, whether or not his views are shared by the government.

As a frequent writer of letters to the editor (which he invariably signs with his own name) Mr. Davis has, by pointedly sticking his fingers through the holes in B.C.'s energy policies, turned out to be one of the government's most persistent critics. Certainly he has done more than any energy minister has done since he held the job to get British Columbians thinking about their energy problems.

company reports

Provigo Inc.

Provigo Inc. announced Thursday that its profit for the 40-week period ended Nov. 4, 1979, rose to $14 million, or $3.09 a share, from $10.4 million, or $2.44 a share, for the comparable period last year.

Profit for the quarter ended Nov. 4, 1979, advanced to $4.36 million, or 90 cents a share, from $3.6 million, or 86 cents a share, last year.

Sales climbed 13.6 per cent to $1.76 billion from $1.54 billion for the respective 40-week periods, and to $547 million from $497 million for the respective 12-week periods.

Almost half of the increase was based on sales gains and operating improvements, Archie R. McCardell, chairman and chief executive officer, and Warren J. Hayford, president and chief operating officer, said. Other factors included changes in British tax laws and fluctuations in the value of foreign currencies.

The profit increase for the year ended Oct. 31 brought earnings to a record $369.9 million on a 25.9-per-cent gain in sales to $8.4 billion, also a record. Net income for the year equalled $12.01 a share, compared with $6.14 in 1978.

Fourth-quarter profits increased by 102.1 per cent over the comparable period the previous year, reaching $147.6 million on a 19.9-per-cent sales gain to $2.5 billion.

Harvester said much of the increased profits was reinvested in operations.

Harvester

International Harvester posted a 98-per-cent profit increase during fiscal 1979 over the previous year, the farm and heavy equipment manufacturer said Thursday.

'Hard realities' must be faced

WINNIPEG (UPC) — Prospects are good for strong economic growth in the 1980s if Canadians will face some "hard realities," Canadian Manufacturers' Association president John Bulman said in a year-end statement.

"Part of the difficulty Canada now has in realizing its full economic potential is the unusual degree of political uncertainty," Bulman said. "However I am confident that Canadians will make wise and practical choices and face some hard realities in 1980."

Among those "hard realities," Bulman listed higher world energy prices needed to conserve resources and generate funds for exploration, "the strong and full integration" of the strengths of Canada's various regions, and the need for greater individual effort to improve productivity.

"With Canadians taking this approach, we can be assured of entering the 1980s with greater stability and a sound basis for solid economic growth in the next decade," Bulman said.

The CMC president warned in his message that 1980 "will start off on a subdued note in a number of industries," but predicted a "fairly good" year for the manufacturing sector as a whole.

He said Canada could avoid a drastic drop-off in manufacturing such as occurred in the mid-1970s despite the expected U.S. recession, "because our competitive position is considerably stronger.

Haig made UTC head

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Gen. Alexander Haig, former NATO commander and chief of staff to President Richard Nixon, will become president and chief operating officer of United Technologies Corp., the company has announced.

Haig, 55, succeeds Harry Gray as president of UTC. His salary was not announced. Gray will remain as chairman and chief executive officer.

Haig, chief of staff at the White House when Nixon resigned, retired last summer as Supreme Allied Commander of NATO forces in Europe. He speculated publicly about seeking the 1980 Republican presidential nomination but said last weekend that he has decided against running.

Clark MacGregor, who managed Nixon's re-election campaign in 1972, is a senior vice-president at the Hartford-based conglomerate. William Evans, a retired air force general who headed NATO's air forces, is a vice-president.

UTC, which describes itself as one of the top 20 manufacturing companies in the United States, lost $44 million and had sales of $2 billion when Gray took over in 1971. For the first nine months of 1979, UTC had record sales of $6 billion, up 33 per cent from the first nine months of 1978, and record net income of $237 million, up 37 per cent from 1978.

Nfld. oil finds stir interest

SOUTH BROOK, Nfld. (CP) — Premier Brian Peckford says oil and gas discoveries off Newfoundland have stirred a lot of interest in Canada and the U.S.

Peckford said in an interview here Thursday that his government is constantly getting inquiries from firms interested in moving into the province. He says several American and Alberta companies have already bought land in Newfoundland on the chance that there will be some major oil and gas discoveries.

One of the hottest such finds is the Hibernia well located about 290 nautical miles off the Newfoundland coast.

Peckford has repeatedly stressed there is still much testing to do and it will be at least spring before it is known if the well will be commercially viable.

Great Lakes good buy

TORONTO (CP) — Shares of Great Lakes Forest Products Ltd. represent a good buy for persons with an investment horizon of one year or more, says a study by Wood Gundy Ltd. Recent acquisition of the Dryden, Ont., pulp mill from Reed Paper Ltd. increases Great Lakes potential growth which had been previously limited by the size of its plant, says the study. The Dryden mill will permit a 50-per-cent growth in capacity in the next five to seven years.

TV 'mini-debates' urged by Trudeau

ELECTION 80

OTTAWA (UPC) — Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau urged the three major television networks Thursday to scrap a proposed leadership debate and substitute a series of mini-debates between party spokesmen on key issues.

The series of debates on energy, the economy and foreign affairs would "not necessarily preclude a leadership debate," said Trudeau's principle secretary and top adviser Jim Coutts.

"We haven't worked this out. It would be open to negotiations," he said.

Last week Trudeau was lukewarm to the idea of a live leadership debate between Prime Minister Joe Clark and New Democratic leader Ed Broadbent.

Trudeau then told reporters he was "not particularly interested" in a leadership debate although he could have a change of heart if the networks proposed an acceptable format.

Both Clark and Broadbent have already agreed to a three-way debate.

However, Trudeau rejected a single debate between the three leaders shortly before entering a strategy session of Liberal caucus members and provincial and federal Liberal officials who met to draw up key campaign planks.

"I would like to put forward a counter proposal that doesn't put everything on the leaders . . . I would like several debates on everything from energy to economy to foreign affairs . . . and I would like spokesmen from the various parties to take part, Trudeau said.

"I hope the networks will consider my suggestion because this campaign shouldn't be centred around the leaders."

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, CTV and Global have offered to stage English and French debates on February 10 — eight days before the election.

The proposed format would have followed the same pattern as the spring debate held shortly before the May 22 election.

Meanwhile in other election news, Allan MacEachen, chairman of the Liberal Party's election platform committee, said Thursday the Liberals won't be ready to tell voters their policy on energy prices for at least a week.

"We haven't reached that point," MacEachen told reporters as he emerged from a closed session of a 40-member party committee which met to hammer out a platform for the Feb. 18 election campaign.

The group meets again today and next week to work out a platform on a range of issues including energy, the economy,oand the budget which provoked the defeat of the Conservative government.

"We won't reach conclusions, I hope, for another week or so," MacEachen said when asked when the party would state its policy on energy prices.

Meanwhile, New Democratic Party leader Ed Broadbent was in Toronto filming television commercials to be aired later in the campaign.

All three parties are expected to resume campaigning shortly after New Year's Day.

ANTIQUE RIFLES have become an exciting and relatively inexpensive hobby for many Western history buffs. The group shown here are members of the Brant Muzzle Loaders, a Brantford, Ont., organization interested primarily in the flintlock rifle. Ross Macdonald (top) is enveloped in smoke as he blasts away with his custom-made rifle. Below, Raymond Chouimard, of Simcoe, Ont., loads his rifle during a target shoot while Mark Macdonald (bottom right) acts as target spotter for the contestants.

Your friendly operator now has time for you

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario and Quebec telephone callers who encountered curt Bell Canada operators earlier this week may find the same operators much more helpful today.

Operators, in the middle of a contract dispute with Bell, will be practising what their union — the Communications Workers of Canada — calls super service.

The service calls for operators to be as be helpful and friendly as possible to customers, including discussing the weather and giving the correct time — a service Bell stopped several years ago.

Meanwhile, the two sides are scheduled to meet in Montreal today to resume contract talks that broke off a week ago. A company spokesman said Bell has prepared a new offer "which is inspired essentially" by a conciliator's report.

Bob Lamb, national representative for the union, said operators practising super service will take their time in dealing with customers seeking information "to make darn sure it's correct."

The extra courtesy will likely mean operators will not be able to handle their usual quota of 800 to 1,000 calls a day.

Super service replaces unilingual service, which operators used after returning to work Thursday following a 48-hour walkout which extended over Christmas and Boxing Day.

Report slams Manitoba Hydro

WINNIPEG (CP) — Manitobans spent from $500 million to $800 million more than necessary to develop northern hydro electric generation capacity, Finance Minister Don Craik said Thursday.

The minister responsible for Manitoba Hydro made the statement shortly after making public a report on the operations of the utility.

He said his estimates do not include losses through currency exchanges on foreign loans needed to pay for development projects.

The report was the product of a two-year study by George E. Tritschler, former chief justice of the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench, into the operations of Manitoba Hydro.

Craik described it as "a serious condemnation of the top management of hydro."

The study blamed bad judgment and poor planning on the part of former hydro officials for the waste of millions of dollars and accused the former New Democratic Party government of political interference in hydro affairs.

It was immediately denounced by some NDP opposition members as political justification for government policy, but official opposition reaction is expected today.

The 493-page report, produced at a cost of $1,350,000, made 52 recommendations, including structural changes in hydro management and the suggestion hydro employees, civil servants and members of the legislature not be members of the hydro board.

The report placed much of the blame for hydro's woes on its two chairmen during the period in question, David Cass-Beggs, who served from 1970 to 1972, and his successor Leonard Bateman.

Bateman was fired a year ago after saying he unintentionally gave the legislature and government officials misleading information on hydro plans.

The report traced much of the overspending to the costly development decisions involving projects on the Churchill-Nelson River system, decisions it said Cass-Beggs often made without a sound engineering basis.

It questioned his decision to proceed with regulation of Lake Winnipeg and the related Jenpeg power project — at a total final cost of $315 million — before building the $222.5 million Churchill River diversion, a move "conceived in haste after a few days' study."

The question of whether the Lake Winnipeg regulation or Churchill River diversion should have come first was an issue in the 1977 general election that brought the Progressive Conservative government of Sterling Lyon to power.

Cass-Beggs was not immediately available for comment but Bateman issued a prepared statement Thursday afternoon defending his own actions.

The 61-year-old engineer, now operating his own consulting firm, said the decisions questioned in the report have ultimately benefitted Manitoba through the sale of export power.

UIC tables scrapped

OTTAWA (CP) — Revenue Minister Walter Baker reiterated Thursday that 1980 unemployment insurance premium tables, mailed recently to about 700,000 employers across Canada, are no longer valid.

The tables call for premiums of $1.60 per $100 of insurable earnings. However, they are based on the Progressive Conservatives' Dec. 11 budget, most of which was invalidated when the government was defeated.

A revenue department spokesman, citing fears of confusion on the part of many employers, said Thursday it is advising use of the 1979 tables, based on a premium rate of $1.35 per $100 in insurable earnings, until new ones are issued early in February.

The new tables will make "appropriate adjustments" for the automatic Jan. 1 increase in maximum insurable earnings from $265 per week to $290, according to a new release from the department. The rise is the result of indexing for the effects of inflation in 1979.

The department added, however, that the Canada pension plan contribution scale set out in the 1980 tables is correct since it was not affected by the defeat of the budget and the fall of the government.

Datsun recall slated?

TORONTO (CP) — About 295,000 Datsun cars are being recalled in the U.S. because of a potential hazard in cold-weather driving, but it will be a few days before a decision is reached on whether Canada will follow suit.

Nissan U.S.A., which markets Datsuns in the U.S., announced Wednesday it is voluntarily recalling 1975-through-1979 280-ZX models and 1977-through-1979 810 models.

But Yoshikazu Kawana, executive vice-president of Nissan Automobile Co. (Canada) Ltd., said it is up to the Canadian transport department to instruct his firm to carry out the recall.

Nissan announced in December that moisture from the ventilation system in very low temperatures could offset the throttle system of fuel-injected models and cause a prolonged fast-idle.

Music industry picks top '70s

TORONTO (CP) — Gordon Lightfoot and Anne Murray have been chosen Canadian male and female recording artists of the decade in a survey conducted by the Canadian Recording Industry Association and the Canadian Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences.

The survey results, announced Thursday, also names The Guess Who as Canadian group of the decade.

PQ gets okay

MONTREAL (CP) — Nineteen of Quebec's best-known performers announced Thursday they will vote "yes" in the coming referendum on sovereignty-association.

Comedian Yvon Deschamps told a news conference, "It is time to say yes. We have read the question and it is impossible to say no."

The Parti Quebecois government released the wording of the referendum question earlier this month. It asks Quebecers to give the government the mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association with the rest of Canada.

Other performers in the group included Jean Duceppe, who played the title role in "Mon Oncle Antoine," classical actor Albert Millaire who has performed at Stratford and actress Helene Loiselle.

McKinnon's bid unopposed

Defence Minister Allan McKinnon was unopposed Thursday night as he was renominated Conservative candidate for Victoria in the Feb. 18 federal election.

"It should go down in history as the unnecessary election of 1980," McKinnon told the meeting.

"Although the way they're coming these days, we might have another one in 1980."

McKinnon said the Liberals are political opportunists but he blamed the New Democratic Party most. It was the new and inexperienced MPs in the party who forced the election, he said.

McKinnon told local Tories that if re-elected, as defence and veterans' affairs minister he would continue the job of re-equipping the armed forces, deal with the task force report on armed forces unification due in March and examine possible reforms in the laws which apply to veterans and their widows.

Conservative MP Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West), who is managing the Conservative campaign in B.C., said words like honesty, integrity, hard work and common sense described McKinnon.

He also slammed the Liberals, saying that "Christmas is over." Under Trudeau the Grits engaged in a 10-year giveaway without reckoning the costs, Wenman said.

"We haven't been paying our bills," he said, noting that last year's budget was $12 billion in the red.

McKinnon, 62, a former army officer and ex-chairman of the Victoria school board, was first elected to the House of Commons in 1972. He was among three Tory incumbents and a defeated Conservative candidate renominated Thursday night.

Bill Clarke, who beat Liberal Paul Manning last May 22, was also unopposed in his bid to represent the Conservatives in Vancouver-Quadra. Manning, recently hired by the B.C. government to conduct a site study for a new Vancouver stadium, has not said whether he will run again.

Orchard owner Fred King, 56, was chosen by acclamation as the Conservative candidate in Okanagan-Similkameen. He was first elected May 22.

In Richmond-South Delta, Tom Siddon was asked to campaign again under the Conservative banner. Siddon, 38, parliamentary secretary to Fisheries and Oceans Minister James McGrath, was first elected in an October, 1978, byelection. This will be his third election in just over 16 months.

Conservatives in Nanaimo-Alberni riding chose Scott van Alstine, 37, as their candidate. The Nanaimo lawyer ran in the May 22 election but lost to Ted Miller of the NDP.

In Alberta, Jack Horner announced he will seek nomination in the Crowfoot constituency for the Feb. 18 federal election.

Horner, industry, trade and commerce minister in the former Liberal government, was beaten soundly by Progressive Conservative Arnold Malone in the May 22 general election and said at that time he would not run again.

Truck firm founder dies at 76

The man who founded and built one of B.C.'s foremost trucking companies without knowing how to read a financial statement died Christmas morning at 76.

John Der, president of Capital Freightways Ltd., felled by heart disease, was Victoria-born and went to school in China where he met his wife.

Returning to Victoria to raise a family, he worked as farmer, cab driver, dishwasher, brick yard and lumber camp laborer until he opened Capital Fruit and Vegetable Co. Ld. in 1948.

As a wholesaler, Der at first brought produce from the mainland by barge and CP ferry, then by truck on Black Ball ferries at Nanaimo until B.C. Ferries started running.

At 50, Der with his sons, started Capital Freightways, sold his own produce interests and started trucking fresh meat and produce for such larger operators as Malkin, Slade, Kelly Douglas, Pioneer and General Fruit and Produce.

His business successfully established, Der took time to travel, which he did extensively in the U.S., Europe and the Orient.

He and his wife Rose had nine daughters and three sons, the latter of whom operate the company.

Funeral service will be at 2 p.m. Monday at McCall's chapel, with burial at Royal Oak Cemetery.

TOO LOUD? Well, Henry Robinson thinks the colorful robe he got from a well-meaning Santa in his life was just a bit much for someone his age. And just what age is that? What's that? Oh, well, you don't have to say, sir. Zeller's clerk Doreen O'Hare knows just what to do with the robe.

Many happy returns make for hectic day

By PAUL MINVIELLE

They came by the thousands Thursday, some to shop, some to return, others to exchange.

It was the day after Boxing Day, when too-large socks and too-small shirts could be traded in on something useful — like cash.

Nothing was safe. Woodwards put fancy candles on sale at a terrific bargain price, bringing a lineup of shoppers who quickly snapped them up.

A woman came by and gazed critically at two candles cradled in a man's arms. Suddenly, her hand shot out with cobra-like speed and she snatched one of the candles.

With a glance at his wife, ahead of him in line with four similar on-sale candles, he walked back to the woman who'd grabbed his candle.

"Here," he growled. "You might as well have a matched set." He thrust his remaining candle at her and stalked away.

The woman, oblivious to the man's obvious sarcasm and the disapproving looks of those near her, was delighted with her great good luck.

For some, the bargains were almost too much.

"My God, I'm tempted to buy that tobacco and we don't even smoke," said a woman at a smokers' counter.

Gary Clarke, manager of the men's wear section, said the biggest problem the stores face is the number of people returning items without sales slips.

Many of the items are now on sale, and without a sales slip, it's impossible for the store to determine if the full price or the sale price was paid for any item.

Store policy is customer satisfaction and if a person is insistent enough, the full price will be paid on a returned item even if there isn't a sales slip. In this instance, stores can only depend on customers to be fair and honest.

Emily Gobbett, customer service supervisor at Woolco agreed, feels there were more returns before Christmas.

"People get very annoyed when they're told they have to line up, even if the line is only two people long."

There was a touch of the bizarre in some shops. At Zeller's, a man brought in a dead budgie in a bag and tried to return it.

And one man marched in with two packages, still giftwrapped, and asked to exchange them.

"I don't care what's in them," he told the startled clerk. "I just want to exchange them."

VICTORIA CITY TAXPAYERS

12% Per Annum ALLOWED ON PREPAID TAXES

Prepayments of $10.00 or more will now be accepted by the City of Victoria to be applied on account of the 1980 real property tax levies.

Payments received between now and April 30th, 1980, will be credited with interest from January 1st, 1980, or the date of payment (whichever is later), to June 30th, 1980, at the rate of 12% per annum.

Broker watchdog named

An RCMP officer who founded a police team specializing in stock exchange investigations has been named B.C. superintendent of brokers.

Rupert L. Bullock, 39, a 20-year veteran with the force, replaces Bill Irwin who left the government in September to become assistant to the president of the Vancouver Stock Exchange.

Bullock, selected from among 700 candidates for the position, is a University of British Columbia commerce graduate, a graduate of the Canadian Securities Course and is working on the final year of his certified general accounting diploma.

The chief accountant in the superintendent's office, Earl Thomas Jewitt, has been promoted to Bullock's deputy.

Jewitt, 56, is a chartered accountant with 13 years of senior-level experience in the superintendent's office.

Irwin is one of several senior officials to leave the ministry of consumer and corporate affairs in the last few months.

The minister, Jim Nielsen, announced Thursday that Perry Anglin, assistant deputy minister for consumer affairs, is leaving next month. Anglin came to B.C. on an executive exchange program from the federal government in 1977 and is leaving in mid-January on completion of the program.

A competition will be held to find a replacement.

At the same time, Nielsen confirmed the appointment of E. Thomas Cantell Q.C as assistant deputy minister for corporate affairs. He has held that position on acting basis since August.

Before the judge

A 45-year-old unemployed seaman Thursday became one of the first charged in Victoria Provincial court with fraud in connection with the provincial government's distribution of five free British Columbia Resrources Investment Corporation to each resident.

Lawrence Joseph Scott, also known as Hill, of 614 Craigflower appeared in court on four counts of defrauding the provincial government after he allegedly applied for BRIC shares for which he was not entitled at four different fianacial institutions last April.

He was released on his own undertaking and remanded without plea until Jan. 10.

A Saanich man let the family dog run loose on the wrong neighbor's lawn Nov. 8.

According to Michael Rye of 510 Phelps, approximately 12 dogs in his immediate neighborhood didn't bother anyone until Rick West moved into 519 Phelps.

West is a dogcatcher with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Rye told the court that West has not "hit it off too well with the rest of us."

He was fined $20 after pleading guilty to allowing his black terrier type dog to trespass on West's property.

Judge William Ostler gave a suspended sentence to a 19-year-old Victoria woman after she pleaded guilty to a charge of possession of stolen property valued under $100.

The court was told that Monique Ploegmakers, 2601 Blanshard, was found Oct. 28 wearing a yellow T-shirt listed among the articles stolen the previous day in a break and enter at Blanshard Elementary School.

scott's world
by vernon scott

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Felice Schachter is genuinely sweet 16, an unspoiled child actress who stars in The Facts of Life, a new TV series about hijinks in a girl's boarding school.

Felice has been an actress since she was three months old, making her debut in a television soap commercial.

From infancy, through childhood to the present, Felice seldom has been out of the public eye as model and actress. Yet she remains a quiet, faultlessly mannered, young lady who hasn't lost the capacity to blush.

She was born and reared in Queens, N.Y., and is trying to adjust to an entirely new life style as a bachelor girl in Hollywood.

Her mother, Suzanne Schachter, is divorced from Felice's father and runs Suzelle Enterprises, a successful management company for young performers.

Suzanne, a native New Yorker herself, is a life-long francophile which doubtless explains the names of her three daughters. In addition to Felice, there is Simone, 14, and Janine, 12, both actresses and models.

Because Suzanne's business and the 22-room family home are in New York, it was necessary for Mama Schachter to allow Felice to go it alone — with a long-time family friend as chaperone — in a Hollywood apartment.

Despite her youth, Felice — a fair-skinned brunette with expressive brown eyes framed by thick black lashes — is an independent youngster who has taken subways to work assignments in New York since she was 12.

She is amused and a bit frustrated by the pampered treatment given child performers in Hollywood. California laws allow her to work only four hours a day with three hours devoted to school and another hour to recreation.

"I'm used to working eight to 12 hours a day," Felice said. "I'd much rather pitch in and get the work done as quickly as possible.

"I felt safer walking the streets of New York than I do out here. I like being independent and self-sufficient. That's how Mom has raised me.

"But now I have a guardian on the set every day. They treat me more like a little kid than they do in New York. I have a tutor with the other six girls in the cast. Back home I go to a private school — I'm in my junior year — which I like a lot better."

Suzanne explained she and her daughters survived some difficult times emotionally and financially after the divorce.

"There were times about five years ago when we had no heat in the house," she said. "Sure it has 22 rooms and is too big for the four of us. But home is home and it was an emotional thing with us.

"We had garage sales and did everything we could to bring in money. The girls worked as models and actresses. I managed their careers, sometimes putting them all to work in the same project.

"Now I handle 60 kids back east and things are a whole lot better for us. I didn't like the idea of bringing Felice out here for a TV series. But it's a wonderful opportunity for her. And she loves the work."

The Facts of Life, which NBC will launch as a weekly series in March, made its debut in four episodes last summer.

Felice who admits she already is lonesome for her sisters and friends, said, "I've only been here two weeks but I can't wait to get home.

"I'm not putting Hollywood down. I love the weather, the fresh fruit, swimming and roller skating and the college boys in Westwood. The series is a learning experience for me and important to my career.

"I don't know about other child actors and models, but I love working. Modelling especially comes easy to me. I haven't missed a normal childhood either. Instead of being a cheerleader, I work.

"I guess I'm between childhood and womanhood. I can be a kid all day at school and an actress when I have to work. And then I can go to a disco at night and sort of be a woman of 18.

"I enjoy the company of adults as much as I do being with kids. I just behave differently when I've with adults.

"Maybe I'm a little bit precocious because I've spent so much time in show business. But I'm still able to have fun with people my age. Back in New York I'm the class clown."

At last it's getting better for lifetime asbestos worker

By PAT DUFOUR

Frank Morgan has spent 35 years working with potentially deadly asbestos. In that time, he's seen two co-workers die of lung cancer.

But now, thanks to increasing safety regulations, he feels he works in the best environment he's ever known.

Morgan, 67, has worked in both civilian industry and the ship repair unit of CFB Esquimalt.

Like many others, Morgan for years smeared his face with vaseline while on the job so that the fibres would cling to his skin, lowering the risk of them being inhaled and reaching his lungs.

Always safety-conscious, he's enthusiastic over the intensified safety program that the ship repair unit put into effect in January.

Getting ready to work in the engine room of the destroyer-escort HMCS Yukon on Thursday, he showed the Times new fool-proof suits used by workers in the unit.

They work in two-layer suits, breathing clean fresh air pumped in before starting on the job. When the job is completed the outer layer is taken off, put into plastic bags and never used again.

Ed Stephenson, group manager and chairman of the unit's asbestos control committee which is composed of both union and management personnel, explained that it was only in the early 1970s that people began to be concerned about the health hazard of working with asbestos and its environmental impact.

"Up until then, asbestosis was considered an acceptable hazard, like black lung with coal mining," he said, "We really hadn't got a handle on the environment."

He and safety officer Paul Severny visited the United States' naval yard in Philadelpia in June and the new suits are just one of the safety steps that resulted from that visit.

Another step has been routine checking of workers exposed to asbestos by the department of national health and welfare for asbestos fibre counts. The Defence Research Establishment Pacific in the dockyard is now preparing to take over the monitoring and testing of about 1,000 workers.

The ship repair unit will also acquire an extraction system, which Stephenson described as "a big giant vacuum cleaner with an absolute filtration system."

In the old days when dockyard workers were aboard ships, working with asbestos, insulating boilers, steam pipes, hot water pipes and other areas, the ships' ventilation systems were on, allowing the potentially dangerous fibres to be airborne throughout the vessels. Now the ventilation systems are shut down to reduce the risk of exposure.

Disposal of waste asbestos was also casual.

Plans call for the gradual replacement of asbestos with a less harmful combination of fiberglass and calcium silicate.

As Morgan put it, "This is the best place in which I ever worked."

Covers on cakes thwart forlorn bird in bakery window

A Victoria pigeon spent the holidays in a warm, dry place but he was glad to be out of there Thursday morning after a couple of days without food or water.

Bakery owner Tim Waddell on Monday noticed several pigeons trying to get in the back door of the Lillian West bakery at 773 Fort, attracted by the warmth and aroma of fresh baking.

He shooed them away but one got in undetected and spent Christmas and Boxing Day inside, upstairs in the shop window.

But any hopes of a feast were a pigeon-style illusion. Most fresh baked goods had been sold by Monday. Only wrapped and covered Christmas cakes and the like were left in the window.

The bird was a curiosity and a conversation piece in the bakery window during the holidays, until Waddell liberated it Thursday morning.

At least two Langford residents are concerned that sloppy work by enumerators may deprive them of their votes in the Feb. 18 federal election.

Mr. and Mrs Fred Boulter, 808 Brock, are still angry at being denied their vote in the May 22 election.

Boulter had spent all that morning working as a scrutineer in Gordon United Church.

Boulter says people were able to come in and vote, even if they were not on the list, after they had given their names and addresses.

It was a different story, however, when he and his wife went to register their own votes at the Royal Canadian Legion on Station Road.

They took their counterfoils that the enumerator had given them only to find they had been left off the list through some error.

The Boulters really got their dander up when they were told the only way they could vote was to go to the Duncan election headquarters.

Defeat of the Tory government has cost Victoria returning officer Malcolm Anderson two months in sunny Africa.

As one of Canada's 282 federal ROs, Anderson has to gird up for the general election Feb. 18 and will be unable to join observers from 10 Commonwealth nations chosen to oversee the Rhodesian election.

"I was hoping the rebels might have carried on a little longer," he quipped.

Anderson was one of three Canadian returning officers picked to help ensure an orderly election Feb. 27-29 of a new Rhodesian government.

For 15 years Jason Goldenknive, 32, has been running for himself.

Now he thinks it's time he ran for the needy, and on New Year's Day he'll pound the pavement in an effort to cover 38 miles between Duncan and Victoria.

The heavy equipment operator, ex-disc jockey and musician said he's been running since high school days, runs 1½ miles to and from work and can go five miles without trouble, although he has run 20 miles at a stretch within the past few years.

"I was thinking of volunteering, like for the Boys' Club, but that wouldn't work out too well with my job. Now I'm laid off I'd like to do something for children and need a sponsor to give the proceeds to needy families."

Goldenknive is asking donors to pledge cash for every mile completed in his super-marathon Tuesday. St. Vincent de Paul has agreed to disburse the money, but time is short and Goldenknive still needs a third party — like a bank — to be the collector.

Services of a bank or other acceptable organization to receive donations may be offered through St. Vincent de Paul Society treasurer, G.F. Cox, 3919 Onyx, 477-4619.

Mrs. Tedford, 1470 Dallas Rd., found a six-inch amber glass ball in her driveway after a stormy night.

The Tedfords are ardent beachcombers, but this is the first time they've found a Japanese glass fishing ball in this area. Neighbors say they can't remember ever seeing one before.

Crown counsel Don Laughton and lawyer Martha McNeely were struggling with the court calendar to fix a date for a provincial court hearing early in the New Year.

McNeely pointed out to Judge Fred Green that two weeks in January had been set aside for the preliminary hearing of accused in the econd large scale narcotic case arising out of the surveillance and arrest of a ship off the west coast of Vancouver island, referred to in the courts as Tofino II.

Remarked Green: "If you ever have a Tofino III you'll wreak havoc with these courts."

Mad dogs and Englishmen go out in the midday sun;
The Japanese don't care to, the Chinese wouldn't dare to;
Hindus and Argentines sleep firmly from twelve to one,
But Englishmen detest a siesta.

One has to wonder what Noel Coward would have written if he had witnessed a group of Dutchmen plunging into Beaver Lake in freezing weather. And if he were alive, he could see just such a scene at 2 p.m. New Year's Day.

It will be the fifth annual polar bear dip for the hardy members of the Netherlands Association, but the ice-breaking that characterized last year's swim isn't expected to be needed this year.

But association director Ken Van Gylswyk says the lake will be cold enough to provide a real challenge — especially to the timid.

It's impossible to assume from this activity that the whole world's mad. While about 1,500 or so make their way out to the lake every New Year's Day, only about 50 actually take the plunge.

Psychic power is the latest tool being used by Richard Renaud in his search for his missing doberman Cleo, who was stolen from his car outside McDonald's on Oct. 18.

After advertising in newspapers and on radio and distributing flyers with his pet's description on them, Renaud appealed to Town Talk.

The result was a series of phone calls offering help, one of them from a woman with psychic power who said she had seen the dog in her mind in Tillicum Park.

She is now trying to zero in on the house where the dog is being kept.

Instant joy was registered this week when Rhoda Thomas, who is retiring after 22 years with the Greater Victoria Public Library, was honored by the library board.

A bookmender by trade, she was given an impressive volume.

"It's beautiful . . . and it's laminated!" said Rhoda, instantly recognizing the quality.

At the same ceremony, Peggy Anderson was honored on her retirement after 30 years. She was assistant head of the circulation department.

Four youths hunted

Security at the Victoria Youth Detention Home will be tightened after five inmates — all boys — fled from their escorts on special Christmas outings Thursday night.

Four were still at large today.

Del Phillips, director of the home at 1125 Pembroke, said further outings and activities planned for the inmates over the holiday period will be curtailed.

One returned to the detention centre about an hour later.

Two other juveniles, part of a group of four attending a movie in downtown Victoria, escaped in a car which pulled up as they were stopping at McDonalds on Pandora for a snack.

Phillips said all of the escapers were 14 to 15, two had been sentenced to periods of confinement and the other three were on remand awaiting trial.

Hold-up nets $100

City police are searching for a slim, knife-wielding bandit who held up a small grocery store at Fairfield and Vancouver Thursday night.

A police spokesman said the man, wearing a nylon stocking over his face, walked into the store at 8:55 p.m. and ordered the proprietor to hand over the money in the till, about $100, before fleeing west on Fairfield.

The suspect was described as about six feet tall, slim and wearing a blue kangaroo top without a hood and blue jeans.

Dog pierced by arrow

Saanich police and the SPCA are investigating the bow-and-arrow shooting of a dog Thursday on a Cordova Bay beach.

Tom Honkainmaa, 4999 Cordova Bay Road, said today his nine-month-old Malamute-German Shepherd cross is recuperating at a Langford veterinary hospital.

She was shot through the chest with a razor sharp arrow from a bow believed similar to those used for deer hunting on the Saanich Peninsula.

Hankainmaa said the vet told him his pet will live but will be lame the rest of her life.

The incident occurred about 4:30 p.m. while the dog was playing on the beach near Honkainmaa's home.

A Saanich police spokesman said he isn't aware of any other pet shootings but said bow hunting is popular in the area.

Hankainmaa described his dog Koba as a "playful harmless puppy" and said he couldn't believe it when the animal staggered through his door with an arrow poking out its chest.

"If the dog is a nuisance there are easier ways of getting rid of it, like throwing rocks or calling the SPCA," he said.

Shooting of pets is illegal under the Cruelty to Animals Act and conviction carries a small fine.

Deadly canine virus in B.C.

A deadly canine intestinal virus first detected in the United States 18 months ago has been found in dogs in B.C.

U.S. reports say the virus can kill dogs within two days of their exposure, but the strain found in B.C. does not appear to be as virulent.

Dr. Cleve Cunningham, assistant director of the provincial veterinary laboratory in Abbotsford, told the Times several cases have been detected since summer in the Vancouver area and Fraser Valley. He said a kennel in Prince George had an outbreak and lost a portion of its younger dogs.

There have been no cases reported on Vancouver Island.

The virus, belonging to the parvo family of viruses, causes acute hemorrhagic gastroenteritis. Infected dogs bleed internally, and suffer violent diarrhea and vomiting.

Veterinarians have not developed a vaccine for it and there is disagreement over where the virus came from.

Some experts feel it is a mutant of feline panoleukopenia, the virus that causes distemper in cats.

But Cunningham doesn't agree. He said there is no evidence of cross-pathogenicity of cat and dog viruses.

Cunningham said the number of cases has fallen off since summer. There was one reported in November, but none this month.

"We've seen enough to know it's definitely around," he said. "I suspect many animals get the virus but don't get much disease out of it."

$90,000 computer blaze

More than $90,000 damage was done when fire broke out in a computer in the basement of a house at 2523 Asquith Thursday night.

The computer, desks, filing cabinets and a copying machine owned by the Ambulance Employees Union pension trustees were destroyed.

A fire department spokesman said Mrs. Leo McArdle, whose husband is chairman of the trustees and uses the basement as his office, smelled smoke shortly before 7 p.m. and when she went to investigate saw sparks coming from the computer.

By the time firemen arrived flames had broken through to the main floor of the two-storey house. It took three hours to extinguish the blaze.

Fire officials said about $26,000 damage was done to the house and McArdle estimated the damage to the computer and office equipment at about $65,000.

An electrical fire early today did about $1,000 damage to the millwright shop at B.C. Forest Products, 371 Gorge East.

Meanwhile, H.B. Duke, owner of a house at 1611 Myrtle where there was a shed fire Wednesday night, denied the fire was caused by hot ashes placed in a box as reported in the Times Thursday.

Duke said the origin of the fire, which caused about $3,200 damage, is still under question.

Duke said his daughter, Madeline, who rents the house from him, had told firemen she had removed ashes from the fireplace earlier in the day but had placed them in a composte heap.

Cougar power too much for Bruins

By ERNIE FEDORUK

New Westminster coach Ernie McLean sees an end to the airlift that has prevailed around his base in recent weeks but Bruins' manager Bill Shinske would prefer to say good riddance to Victoria Cougars' power play.

"That has to be the best power play I've seen in the (Western Hockey) league since (Tom) Lysiak, (Lanny) McDonald and (Boyd) Anderson operated out of Medicine Hat," said Shinske as he watched Victoria defeat the Bruins 8-3 before 3,121 fans at Memorial Arena on Thursday.

The praise should strike a familiar note with Victoria coach Jack Shupe.

He was the one who pulled the strings at Medicine Hat when Lysiak, McDonald and Anderson made rivals pay for their sins in the 1971-72 and 72-73 campaigns.

And, during the 1971-72 season, if they couldn't do the job, snipers such as Stan Weir and Jeff Ablett made their presence felt.

Ah, yes. Shupe remembers them well.

But today, in Victoria, Barry Pederson, Greg Adams, Brad Palmer, Bob Jansch and Mark Robinson are "my main guys" in manpower situations. Other Cougar players also can do the job, Shupe suggests, but they don't get the opportunity because of the scoring effectiveness of the "main guys."

Thursday, given eight chances to utilize an extra man during New Westminster penalties, the Cougars scored four-power play goals. With speed and despatch, one might add.

It took Bob Jansch only 21 seconds to make New Westminster's Rick Amann regret a roughing penalty. Palmer waited 95 seconds for Boris Fistric to feel sorry. Adams scored 47 seconds after ex-teammate Brad Yachimec drew his first penalty as a Bruin, and then Jansch, again, 76 seconds after newcomer Jeff Taylor went off.

The four power-play goals boosted Victoria's total for the season to 66, three behind Regina Pats' pace-setting sum. Shinske, however, is far more impressed with Victoria's extra-man attack than Regina's.

The Cougars spotted New Westminster the first goal, got going on an alert scoring play by Torrie Robertson, then broke it open with three straight power-play efforts that put Victoria on top, 4-1, in the first 26 minutes of action.

Pederson and Adams, with his 34th of the year, completed Victoria's total.

The victory, Victoria's seventh straight over the Bruins, spoiled things for returning defenceman Bruce Howes and four other newcomers — Taylor, Yachimec, Oren Koules and goaltender Tom Muc.

"We're stopping here," McLean said, "and going with the guys we have now."

Howes, who underwent a shoulder operation just before the campaign started, played his first game. He scored a once and set up Marc Chartier for another Bruin goal but that offensive contribution was marred by his being on the ice for six of the eight Victoria goals.

Still, it was better than New Westminster captain Larry Melnyk's performance. Melnyk was on for all eight Victoria goals.

"The defence," conceded McLean, "didn't give Muc much of a chance."

With Saskatoon Blades last year, Muc comes to Westminster as an overage player after starting the season with Nelson Maple Leafs of the Western International League.

Yachimec and Koules, of course, joined Bruins after being claimed from the disbanded Great Falls Americans.

Taylor, speedy but without knowledge of where to go, is a "walk on." His family came from Sarnia for a visit, decided to make their home on the West Coast and Taylor asked McLean for a tryout.

Yachimec, who drew two assists Thursday, and Koules both impressed McLean and are expected to add some goal-scoring punch to a team that has won only three of its first 32 games.

Muc, with the defence stumbling badly in front of him, didn't get much of a chance. But, as No. 6 in a line of Bruin stoppers this season, McLean feels confident the new guy will prove to be his regular starter for the rest of the year.

Pederson, who also picked up five assists, had a brilliant night to spark a Victoria attack that clicked on all cylinders. It was one of Victoria's better offensive games and put the Cougars in a good frame of mind for Saturday's international exhibition with the touring Czechoslovakian juniors.

And the Czechs, if they read, would do well to stay out of the penalty box.

New Wing home not that homey

By The Canadian Press

Detroit Red Wings skated onto the ice in their new arena Thursday night but it was the same old story when they headed for the showers.

There were 19,742 spectators on hand for the first National Hockey League game in the $52-million Joe Louis Arena but the plush surroundings failed to inspire the Red Wings.

It was the largest crowd in the Red Wings' history but there were more boos than cheers as St. Louis Blues won 3-2, handing Detroit its sixth loss in its last nine games.

"The atmosphere's just not the same here," said coach Bobby Kromm, whose Red Wings played at the homey, ancient Olympia before their riverfront colossus was finished.

"The ice was in terrible condition; it was chippy and it took something away from our game.

"It was to the visiting team's advantage playing here, because they're used to playing in a strange place."

It won't be strange long, says the Blues' Bernie Federko.

"Give it a few years and it will be the same as Olympia," said Federko, who scored a goal and set up the other two.

Elsewhere, Los Angeles Kings blanked Quebec Nordiques 3-0 as Charlie Simmer extended his consecutive-game scoring streak to 13 games, Montreal Canadiens had a healthy edge in shots on goal but lost 7-3 to New York Islanders, Buffalo Sabres defeated Toronto Maple Leafs 5-3 and Colorado Rockies edged Minnesota North Stars 4-3.

Detroit took a 2-1 lead into the third period, but Federko tied it at 11:16 of that session and fed Blair Chapman with 6:19 remaining.

"The crowd didn't seem as loud, but then, it was a boring game," said Detroit's Paul Woods. "It would have been dull in Olympia."

Brian Sutter scored the Blues' first goal before Dennis Sobchuk and Danny Bolduc tallied for Detroit.

Simmer scored twice in extending his goal-scoring streak to within three games of the all-time NHL record and Ron Grahame stopped 26 shos for his second shutout of the year as Los Angeles won its sixth consecutive home game.

Simmer, raising his goal total to 34 for the season, is chasing the record held by Harry (Punch) Broadbent of Ottawa Senators during the 1921-22 season.

Dave Taylor netted his 23rd of the season to round out the Kings' scoring. Marcel Dionne, who centres Simmer and Taylor on the NHL's highest-scoring line, had two assists to increase his league-leading points total to 71.

Mike Bossy scored three goals while Clark Gillies added a goal and two assists as the Islanders drubbed Montreal despite being outshot 46-24.

Dimmed by the defeat was the 1,000th point, including playoffs, of right winger Guy Lafleur's career. Lafleur, 28, in his ninth NHL season, opened the scoring at 3:05 of the first period to become the youngest player - and the 12th in league history - to reach that plateau.

Also scoring for New York were Garry Howatt, Anders Kallur and Bob Nystrom. Steve Shutt and Pierre Larouche added goals for the Canadiens in the Forum.

The visitors' dressing room was not an easy place for reporters to work after the game since the Toronto players refused to talk.

Scotty skipping visit to Forum

MONTREAL (CP) — The homecoming of former Montreal Canadiens' coach Scotty Bowman will have to wait until another day.

Bowman, who resigned his Montreal coaching position last June to become the coach, general-manager and director of hockey operations of Buffalo Sabres of the National Hockey League, will not be with the Sabres when they make their first regular-season visit to the Forum on Saturday.

The Sabres coach said today that he is planning a scouting trip that will relieve him of his duties behind the bench for the club's next four games.

In Bowman's absence, assistant coach Roger Neilson will handle the Sabres.

It is the second time this season that Bowman has missed an opportunity to face the team that he guided to five Stanley Cup triumphs in eight seasons. He turned the coaching reins over to Neilson last September when the Sabres visited Montreal for an exhibition game.

A few weeks ago Bowman was quoted as saying that he would not be with the Sabres when they played in Montreal because he did not intend to help boost attendance figures by his presence, which in turn would profit the Canadiens' organization.

In spite of the statement, ticket sales have been brisk for the Sabres' visit, undoubtedly in anticipation of Bowman's return.

Red Army bombs Rangers

NEW YORK (CP) — For the first 20 minutes Thursday night, New York Rangers looked like they had it made against Central Red Army of the Soviet Union. Then came the deluge.

The Russians, who trailed 1-0 after the first period, exploded in the second. They shelled goalie Steve Baker out of the Ranger net with three goals and then pumped two more past reliever John Davidson to end up with a 5-2 exhibition hockey win.

Baker faced 10 shots, Davidson was tested 13 times and Vladislav Tretiak handled 18 saves for the Soviets.

In the opening period, New York played carefully and the Russians were sloppy. Tenacious New York forechecking, combined with what looked like grogginess on the part of the fleet Soviet team, gave the Rangers an edge.

The Rangers opened the scoring at 5:22 of the first period when defenceman Mario Marois smacked a hard drive from the point with Steve Vickers parked on Tretiak's elbow. Vickers deflected the shot.

In the second period, though, the Russian clockwork was wound up and running.

Varnakov grabbed a loose puck early in the period, passed to Victor Zhluktov and fired the return pass over Baker. His second goal came five minutes later, when he repeated the give-and-go manoeuvre with Vladimir Kovin.

Lobanov made the score 3-1 less than a minute later, rifling a long drive in off Baker's glove.

Davidson came into the game at 10:16 of the period, but had less than two minutes grace. Lobanov victimized Ranger defenceman Carol Vadnais along the boards, stole the puck and dumped it to Drozdetski, who rapped it in at 12:04.

Less than five minutes later, Petrov found himself in a tangle of skates and players and, unable to get his stick free, smartly kicked the puck out to Kharlamov, who scored on a quick wrist shot.

In the third period, Greschner's shot appeared to strike a falling Russian defenceman, who carried the puck into the net with him.

Dave Maloney, the Rangers' captain, called the Russians "a helluva hockey team," but said the differences in hockey style are so radical that competitions like this are almost meaningless.

"I don't know what it would be like to watch two teams play that same way,"

"I just don't see why we play them," he went on. "If people want to see European hockey, then have two teams come over. Until we either get our game more technically closer to the way they're playing, we're really not gaining a whole lot."

The results left Canada, represented by Peterborough Petes of the Ontario Major Junior Hockey League, on the losing end of a 2-1 score with Finland in the opening game of the tourney for both clubs.

And while only seven members of the Canadian team remained to congratulate the Finns in the usual post-game ceremonies, others were reported to have stormed off the ice and taken out their frustrations on the lockerroom.

Keenan, coach of last year's Memorial Cup champions, saw his team playing two men short midway through the third period with the score tied 1-1.

He requested Finland's starry defenceman Reijo Ruotsalainen's stick be measured. Officials found the stick illegal and Ruotsalainen drew a two-minute minor penalty.

With four minutes remaining and the Canadians a man short, Keenan decided to call another measurement. This time the Finnish stick he picked was within the accepted measurement and the Canadians found themselves two men short.

Terry Bovair scored for Peterborough.

Keenan said he ordered his players to the dressing room to avoid brawling.

The Petes took 13 penalties to four for the Finns.

In other games, Czechoslovakia routed the U.S. 7-3, the defending champion Soviet Union blew past Switzerland 6-0 and Sweden defeated West Germany 5-1.

Olympic team stuns Dynamos

CALGARY (CP) — Just when it appeared the end was near, Canada's Olympic hockey team exploded for four third-period goals to humble touring Moscow Dynamo 9-5 Thursday night in the first game of a best-of-three series.

Canada, stunning the Soviets with a 5-0 lead midway through the second period, allowed the Dynamo to pull within two goals after 40 minutes.

John Devaney scored three goals for the Olympic team while linemate Kevin Primeau added two. Dave Hindmarch, Glenn Anderson, Stelio Zupancich and Ken Berry got singles.

Vladimir Devyatov scored twice for Moscow, which outshot Canada 37-26. Peter Prirodin, Alexander Golikov and Alexander Maltsev added singles.

The 70s: one man's notes

In hockey we would have for ...the rise and dominance of the Russian bear. Everybody, it seems, once the Soviets took over as kingpins of Canada's national sport. But not back then. We still believed. Especially after that glorious moment that Paul Henderson will never forget when he scored the winning goal for Team Canada in the momentous 1972 super series.

It was '72, wasn't it? Yep. Sept. 28, with just 34 seconds to play, giving Canada a 6-5 victory and the series. Canada was united again, but not for long. The name changed, but the result was the same. It was Team NHL which took this year's beating.

And more history — the birth, and death, of an entire league. The World Hockey Association is no more.

This was a time too of hockey superstars. Bobby Orr was just the best ever, everbody agreed, but his knees couldn't stand the strain. Now he is only a legend. Pity. Meanwhile, Gordie Howe is still going strong, as he was at the turn of the last decade, and the one before, and the one before; but, like poetry, in slow motion now. Still, his every record is an LP. For other names synonymous with greatness, please try Bobbie Hull and Ken Dryden.

Vikings need time to strike top stride

OTTAWA — University of Victoria Vikings didn't hit their best stride until after the intermission, but they still had enough to get by Guelph Gryphons 91-85 in an opening round game of the 10th annual Carleton Christmas invitational basketball tournament Thursday.

The Vikings, who hadn't played since Dec. 7, and ranked No. 1 in the nation, got away to a quick start against the Gryphons, but the Guelph club rallied to hold a 43-41 margin at the break.

Vikings then took command and were on top all the way in the second half, leading by as many as 10 points.

Vikings shot 50 per cent from the field and 74 per cent from the foul line.

Gryphons shot 63 per cent from the floor.

Gerald Kazanowksi had 18 points to lead the Vikings while Reni Dolcetti and Billy Loos had 16 each. The Gryphons were paced by Tom Hislop with 21 points, Mike Sesto with 18 and Rick Dundas with 14.

Vikings meet York Yeoman, ranked No. 6, in today's semi-final action, while Wndsor Lancers and Carleton Ravens meet in the other semi-final.

York defeated Concordia Stingers 97-87, Windsor downed Ottawa Gee-Gees 100-70 and host Carleton trimmed Bishop's Gaiters 89-73.

The Ravens, out in front 52-35 at half-time, got 25 points from Tom Cholock and 17 from Rick Powers while Mike Mullins and Trevor Bennett each scored 16 for the Gaiters.

Steelers, Eagles, Cowboys picked

By BRUCE LOWITT
The Associated Press

Pressure — the ability to deal with it — is what the National Football League playoffs are all about.

That's what makes Pittsburgh a winner, and Dallas, too. That's why the Steelers and Cowboys and Philadelphia Eagles will come out of the weekend with at least one more game on the schedule.

If Earl Campbell and Dan Pastorini and Ken Burrough were healthy, we'd be tempted to pick Houston Oilers in an upset. But without those big guns at full strength, San Diego Chargers have to be overwhelming favorites.

SATURDAY

National Conference

Philadelphia Eagles 13 Tampa Bay Buccaneers 9: The Buccaneers, who nearly succumbed to the pressure of a division title race, will buckle this time. Chicago's defence was virtually as good as Tampa Bay's, and the Eagles handled it very nicely.

Wilbert Montgomery and Ricky Bell might be a standoff, but Ron Jaworski outshines Doug Williams, and the Bucs haven't got Harold Carmichael's equal.

American Conference

San Diego Chargers 24 Houston Oilers 14: Campbell is the cornerstone of the Oilers' offence and his presence will be important. But Houston can't count solely on him, and without a sound Dan Pastorini to balance the attack the machinery eventually has to break down.

The Chargers, meanwhile, have Dan Fouts. He may not be the best scrambler around, but he's more mobile than Craig Morton and eventually can pierce almost any defence.

SUNDAY

National Conference

Dallas Cowboys 31 Los Angeles Rams 16: For all the sputtering the Cowboys did this season, they're still a "bottom-line" team that wins the big ones. The Rams, conversely, have a tendency to bottom out when the key games arrive.

Roger Staubach is the acknowledged master of the two-minute drill — but he'll do just as well in the preceding 58 minutes.

American Conference

Pittsburgh Steelers 27 Miami Dolphins 17: The last time the Dolphins paid a post-season visit to Pittsburgh they were en route to an unprecedented 17-0 season. But times change. Bob Griese and Larry Csonka don't have the same supporting cast. They're overmatched.

The only thing better than the Steelers' defence, the best in the conference, is the Steelers' offence, the best in the league. Terry Bradshaw and company will have one fine time.

Gate count in NFL hits an all-time high

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Football League topped 13 million in total attendance for the first time during the 1979 season, while registering the second-highest per-game average in league history, the NFL reported Thursday.

An NFL spokesman said that the unaudited total for the 224-game regular season was 13,182,039 — an all-time league high. The previous high was 12,771,800, set last season as the league extended the schedule to 16 games for each team.

The average per-game attendance was 58,848 this season, second only to the record 58,961 set in 1973.

Colts fire coach

BALTIMORE (AP) — Coach Ted Marchibroda, who fell from favor when Baltimore Colts couldn't win without often-injured quarterback Bert Jones, was fired Thursday by the National Football League team.

"I hate to have it happen, but it was not totally unexpected," Marchibroda said calmly after being informed by general manager Dick Syzmanski of owner Robert Irsay's decision. "Everything happens for the best."

Marchibroda, 48, directed the Colts to American Conference East championships in his first three years with the team and survived a power struggle that led to the firing of general manager Joe Thomas, the man who hired him.

But he couldn't survive the last two 5-11 seasons as Jones played in only seven games while battling a series of injuries to his right shoulder.

Although the Colts, under Marchibroda, had posted a 36-16 record with Jones as the starting quarterback and were 5-20 without him, the fans weren't ready to accept Jones's absence as the sole reason for the team's troubles.

The spectators contended Marchibroad was too conservative with an unimaginative, dull and predictable offence. He was also blamed for poor draft picks and the trading of running back Lydell Mitchell and tight end Raymond Chester.

Home attendance last season was the worst in the NFL, an average of fewer than 37,000 — about 60 per cent of capacity at Memorial Stadium. The turnout for the season finale Dec. 9 was 25,684, smallest in 25 years.

Attention on China at Winter Olympics

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (CP) — When the parade of athletes takes place to open the 1980 Winter Olympics here Feb. 13, attention will focus on a 28-member delegation making its first-ever appearance at the Winter Games.

"We will come here in the spirit of promoting mutual understanding," said Yuan Zaijun, Olympic attache for China, which was granted official status by the International Olympic Committee just last month in a mail vote of its members.

Speaking through an interpreter, Yuan said his country, which has taken part in Summer Olympics but never at the Winter Games, attaches great importance to China's return to the Olympics after a 28-year absence.

"It is with the intention of creating friendships among sportsmen, learning from each other and raising the standard of winter sports, that the Chinese athletes are coming here for the Winter Olympics," Yuan told a news conference Friday.

Here to inspect the various Olympic venues, Yuan said he was impressed with what he saw and would "gain information necessary for the athletes who will compete."

Yuan said China will be represented in alpine and cross-country skiing, the biathalon, figure skating and speed skating, but has no illusions of winning a medal.

"Our standard will be very low," he said. "Our purpose is to learn from the world-class athletes and promote the spirit of competition."

Yuan said that the previous political regime turned against sports and attempted to get the youth involved in the political movement at the expense of athletics.

"For the last 10 years, the Gang of Four tried to stop athletics, so our athletes have had no chance for full training. So, at the moment, the standard of our winter sports is very poor."

He said China has remained proficient in certain sports, such as gymnastics and table tennis, because athletes continued to practise without the aide of the state.

Yuan added that the calibre of Chinese athletes in many sports has not improved because "we still are not a member of many sports federations, so we are unable to compete against foreigners."

The Chinese will enter 15 sports at the Summer Games in Moscow, although the exact number of competitors has not yet been determined, he said.

China's last Olympic participation was at the 1952 Games in Helsinki, Finland.

Yuan said the Chinese are being assisted by foreign coaches in several sports.

"We employ some foreign coaches, including some Americans in swimming," he said. "For Winter Olympics, we have asked the Japanese to help us."

Ice hockey is played in China, but Yuan said it is very difficult to say how long it will be before the Chinese are competitive in the sport.

"We will try our best to catch up," he said with a broad smile.

Paper people expect problems on Moscow visit

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — More than 300,000 foreign visitors attending next year's Moscow Olympic Games — including hundreds of Western newspaper people — will be denied access to their regular newspapers unless the Soviet Union changes its current import policy, an international sales promotion group has claimed.

Distipress, a Zurich-based organization representing newspaper and magazine publishers in 70 countries, says the minimal amount of Western publications available in the Soviet Union will mean that "all foreign athletes . . . members of the press as well as all tourists," will be unable to purchase papers anywhere during their stay.

A Distipress statement said the organization had been trying for two months to get the problem resolved, and had been in contact with the Moscow Organizing Committee in Lausanne and the official Soviet agency for the importation of periodicals.

"Each of these organizations has recently replied . . . by placing responsibility for making any decision on this subject on one or the other parties," the statement said.

The Distipress statement said that when Moscow was picked for the 1980 Summer Games' site, Soviet authorities agreed to abide by the Olympic code. This, as well as the Helsinki Final Act agreement and the UNESCO charter, "clearly indicates that there should be free access to the world press (at the Olympic Games)," the statement said.

A Distipress spokesman, Arnold Kaulich told The Associated Press that at present, 60 to 100 copies of specially-chosen Western newspapers were allowed to be imported into the Soviet Union.

"All of these are found exclusively in the country's five plushest hotels," Kaulich said.

He said there was no evidence that Moscow was intending to increase this quota during the Olympic Games.

"We do not even know who is responsible. It looks like a game of some kind is being played on us," he told a reporter.

A spokesman for the International Olympic Committee said the committee was "well aware" of the problem of newspaper availability.

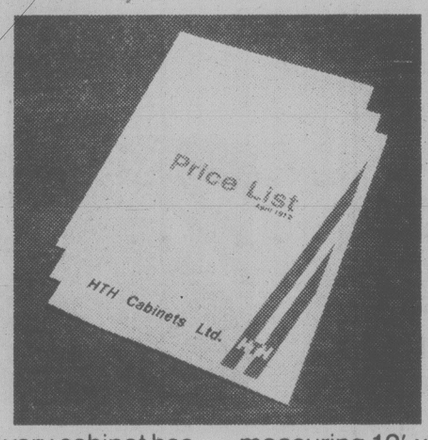
THE HTH PIECE PLAN.

Our price list is designed to take the confusion out of cabinet buying. With this price list, you know the cost of every HTH cabinet you buy – piece by piece. No guesstimates or hidden charges. Our modular units can adapt to a kitchen of any size and you'll know the cost down to the smallest cabinet.



You'll appreciate the extra care that has been given to craftsmanship. The inside of every cabinet has been finished with a plastic lamination that makes HTH cabinets so easy to clean. The drawers never stick because they're suspended on rollers. Pullout racks place pots and pans within easy reach. A shelf pulls out for sit-down work or as an extra breakfast snack table.

Come in and talk over your renovation plans with us. We can advise you on cabinets and even arrange for installation. Bring us your plans and we'll show you ours – the HTH Piece Plan.

The cost for cabinets only $1,768.00

Price is for cabinets only and does not include installation costs, counter tops, appliances, sinks, decorative items, freight or applicable provincial sales taxes.

CATHY SHERK
...backswing surprise

Cathy's quip gets top rating

By CHUCK SVOBODA
CP Sports Editor

Veterans tend to develop a pattern of cliches to cover almost any sports situation so it's sometimes best to seek out the rookies if you want a fresh insight.

Consider, for example, Port Colborne, Ont., golfer Cathy Sherk, who summed up her rookie season on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour this way:

"I'm proud of the fact that I only hit one ball out of bounds in my first year on the tour. On that one I was right in the middle of my backswing when my bra strap broke.

"I didn't mind that so much but I had a heck of a time teeing the next one up."

And then there was Toronto Maple Leafs rookie Laurie Boschman who was awed by the luxuries of joining a National Hockey League training camp after the spartan regimen of junior hockey: "When I walked in, there were skate laces sitting waiting for us if we needed them."

Sherk's revelation about her backswing won top mention as quote-of-the-year in the annual year-end poll of sports writers and sportscasters conducted by The Canadian Press.

Another favorite of the writers and broadcasters was the admission by Montreal Expos pitcher Bill Lee that he used marijuana: "I sprinkle it on my organic buckwheat pancakes in the morning. It makes me impervious to bus fumes when I run."

Baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn fined Lee $250 for his disclosure and the pitcher later launched an appeal, saying: "It's all a bunch of baloney."

Like Lee, Leafs' owner Harold Ballard was again among the favorites because of his often outrageous pronouncements, particularly during the comical episode when, in a two-day span last March, he fired and rehired coach Roger Neilson.

"He wasn't fired; he was just put on furlough for a day or two," said Ballard.

While Ballard treated it as a joke, Neilson had a different perspective: "Yesterday, if you would've told me this was possible, I would've said the whole thing was crazy."

Neilson finally left the Leafs at the end of the 1978-79 season and his successor, Floyd Smith, came up with one of the memorable quotes of the year following one of the club's lacklustre games: "I have nothing to say and I'm only going to say it once."

Another disgruntled hockey coach — Harry Neale of Vancouver Canucks — described one of his team's losses this way: "The best thing about the game was the hot dog I had beforehand."

Yet another NHL coach, Bob Berry of Los Angeles Kings, had a good line about how he gave Charlie Simmer the chance to become a high-scoring winger: "There's a standing joke that my best move was to bring Charlie up from the minors. My worst move was in sending him there in the first place."

Ballard was remembered for another odd episode in September when broadcaster Foster Hewitt complained that his old Maple Leaf Gardens booth had been torn down and burned. Said Ballard: "Hell, we're not in the historical business and that gondola wasn't so old anyway."

First step taken on congress plan

OTTAWA (CP) — A first step in charting the course of amateur sport in the 1980s was taken Thursday with appointment of a steering committee to organize a national congress on amateur sport.

Sports Minister Steve Paproski announced in a news release that Don M. E. Hamilton, 47, of Vancouver will be chairman of the steering committee.

Paproski said the congress will bring together representatives of all sports governing bodies and umbrella organizations to consider administration and structure of amateur sport, promotion and funding of sport and various technical areas, such as coaching.

A date for the congress is to be announced later.

Hamilton, a Vancouver broadcaster and communications consultant, is past president of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the British Columbia Association of Broadcasters and Broadcast News Ltd.

Other members of the steering committee:

Quakes sell Child

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Paul Child of San Jose Earthquakes, third leading scorer in North American Soccer League history, was sold Thursday to Memphis Rogues.

The Quakes said they received more than $100,000 and will get four future draft choices.

Child, a 27-year-old striker, scored eight goals and had six assists for 22 points last season, raising his eight-year NASL totals to 77 goals and 36 assists.

Argos release Gregg to seek Cincinnati job

TORONTO (CP) — Forrest Gregg's sweet love affair with Toronto Argonauts of last season has soured in recent days and the Canadian Football League club announced Thursday it was granting the former National Football League all-star's request to be let out of the two remaining terms of his three-year contract.

Gregg had not indicated an unhappiness with his circumstances here until last week when Cincinnati Bengals of the NFL fired head coach Homer Rice.

Since then it's been no secret Paul Brown, the Bengals' vice-president and general manager, has been openly pursuing Gregg for the job despite Argos' equally apparent reluctance to let him go.

A spokesman for the CFL team said there were no financial considerations in the deal although Argos president Lew Hayman had continued trying to sway Gregg's decision to the "bitter" end.

"We're really bitter about the way things turned out with Gregg,' a club spokesman said. "After all, he came to us looking for a job. We didn't go after him.

"It leaves us in a proper bind."

The bind seems to be a letter that went out this week to season subscribers signed by Gregg, telling them all the great things they could look forward to in 1980.

He announced plans to make Argonauts the No. 1 entertainment in the CFL by finding players at skilled positions capable of putting points on the scoreboard, adding that the Toronto coaching staff and general manager Tommy Hudspeth "are on an extensive scouting and recruiting campaign to find talented players who will best fit in with our coaching philosophies."

"Next year we will have the type of football team on the field that will warrant your support.

"I can assure you that we will do everything in our power to justify your loyalty. . . ."

"Yes, I can visualize the letter verbatum," the Argos spokesman said. "So much for loyalty.

"But Mr. Hayman, I guess, realized there was no sense in holding him (Gregg) to his contract if he felt so strongly about leaving."

There were no other details disclosed other than a terse, one-paragraph statement that the Argos had granted Gregg's request to be relieved of the remaining years on his contract.

Neither Hayman nor Gregg was immediately available for comment.

Gregg's disenchantment with the Argos surfaced last week. He declined to be specific about why or with whom he had been talking.

"My request to be released by Argos is based solely on my being able to look at other alternatives which are very favorable in my mind," Gregg said then.

He refused to elaborate on "other alternatives," but there was popular belief even then he was the front-runner for the head coaching job at Cincinnati.

There are other head coaching jobs available in the NFL, with St. Louis Cardinals, Baltimore Colts — with the sacking of Ted Marchibroda on Thursday — and Green Bay Packers.

One shot all Eddie needed

By The Canadian Press

Eddie Johnson woke up in the fourth period and when Atlanta Hawks gave him the chance to win their National Basketball Association game with Houston Rockets, he took it.

His turning, fading jumper from 15 feet Thursday night gave Atlanta its 112-110 victory. The shot was a little earlier than coach Hubie Brown wanted — there were still three seconds on the clock.

"Down the stretch, Eddie made two critical plays for us," said Brown after his Hawks came from behind to win. "One was off the drive where he beat his man.

"We decided to ride with Eddie on the one shot," Brown said. "He went a little too early, but fortunately for us he made the shot."

Houston was left with a last-second chance as Rick Barry inbounded from midcourt. But Rudy Tomjanovich's 25-footer bounced off the rim as the horn sounded and Atlanta had its first victory over Houston in four tries this season.

Elsewhere Thursday night, Philadelphia '76ers edged San Antonio Spurs 118-114, Washington Bullets beat Milwaukee Bucks 117-108, Cleveland Cavaliers whipped New York Knicks 125-110, Los Angeles Lakers downed Utah Jazz 124-116 and Boston Celtics dumped San Diego Clippers 118-97.

"Eddie Johnson was a big factor," said Barry. "We allowed penetration moves on his part that were a breakdown on our team defence, and when you allow that to happen, you're going to pay the price."

Johnson and Tom McMillen wound up tied for the Hawks' scoring honors with 20 points. Moses Malone led the Rockets with 34 points, while Tomjanovich had 17.

'76ers 118 Spurs 114

Julius Erving led a belated fourth-quarter rally as Philadelphia nosed out San Antonio. Erving scored 12 of his 32 points in the final quarter as the '76ers battled back from a six-point deficit for their fourth straight victory. George Gervin, the NBA's leading scorer, was the game's high point man with 46 for San Antonio.

Bucks 117 Bullets 108

Greg Ballard scored a career-high 27 points to pace Washington, which had lost six of its previous 10 games. Ballard, making his urth consecutive start in place of the injured Bobby Dandridge, sank 10 of 17 field-goal attempts and grabbed 13 rebounds.

Cavaliers 125 Knicks 110

Mike Mitchell scored 34 points, 12 of them in the pivotal third quarter, to spark Cleveland past New York. Campy Russell added 24 and Randy Smith 23 for the Cavaliers, who now have won 13 of their last 14 home games. The Knicks were led by Toby Knight with 30 and rookie Bill Cartwright with 26.

Lakers 124 Jazz 116

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Norm Nixon combined for 58 points as Los Angeles survived a torrid first-quarter effort by Utah. Abdul-Jabbar scored 12 of his 31 points in the opening period, which saw the Jazz shoot 61 per cent from the field to build up a 33-28 lead. However, that figure slipped to 40 per cent in the second quarter and the Lakers took a 61-54 lead into the halftime intermission.

Celtics 118 Clippers 97

Dave Cowens scored 27 points, Cedric Maxwell had 19 and Larry Bird added 18 in just three quarters as Boston routed San Diego and improved its division-leading record in the Atlantic East to 28-8. Lloyd Free, who like Bird sat out the final quarter, led the Clippers scoring with 28 points.

Soccer violence to bring sanctions

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — The general secretary of the European Union of Football Associations (UEFA) warned Thursday that serious sanctions will be taken against European soccer clubs if spectator violence continues unabated.

Writing in the December UEFA Bulletin, Hans Bangerter warned that instead of imposing heavy fines, UEFA might in future forfeit matches, deduct points and order matches played behind closed doors if clubs fail to stamp out incidents caused by supporters.

At the same time, Bangerter said, law courts would be advised to subject the hooligans to "much more severe punishment than has been the case so far."

He said that while British clubs were initially responsible for the incidents, "such incidents presently seem to take place in Latin countries."

He said that never in the 25-year history of UEFA had there been so many incidents of violence caused by fans at the start of a season. Suggesting that the genuine supporters hand over the culprits to the police "as a preventative measure," Bangerter said UEFA was "determined not to let the popular European competitions become victims of their own success."

In Jack's footsteps: meet John Cook

By WILL GRIMSLEY
The Associated Press

Just as the wires are humming with reports that Jack Nicklaus will be constructing more golf courses than he is destroying next season, in walks a tow-head youngster carrying a sheathed driver.

"Hi," he said quite amiably, "I'm John Cook."

Old codgers who used to walk in the wake of a fairway-splitting Ben Hogan, a charging Arnold Palmer and a magnificent, record-setting Nicklaus might imagine they were seeing another page turned in the annals of tournament golf.

Cook is 22, a former amateur champion, blond, slender, immaculately groomed and bubbling with confidence. He has just earned his PGA tour card in qualifying school and is ready to set out in January in pursuit of that brimming pot of gold.

The parallel of his budding career and that of the 39-year-old all-time champion Nicklaus, who admittedly is winding down the competitive phase of the game, is astounding.

He has signed to play the same brand of clubs — MacGregor — that Nicklaus has used throughout his 17 years on the tour.

"My aim is to be a striker of the ball, as Ben Hogan and Nicklaus were," said Cook. "They always have been my heroes. I don't want to be a scrambler."

Cook is a perfect example of the kids — clean-cut, ambitious, unawed — being turned out of colleges now, thrown into the tough qualifying school and set loose on the heart-breaking circuit with its $11 million in prize money.

"No, I am not scared," he said. 'I feel I have passed the toughest part — getting my card. Now it's up to me to make the grade. I think I can."

Cook has been to Morocco, where he played in a tournament sponsored by King Hassan, and to Australia and New Zealand for two tournaments before returning home to tackle the winter tour, starting with the Bob Hope Classic in Palm Springs, Calif., in early January.

His plan is to play the first five tournaments, take a week off after Hawaii, skipping Tucson, then pick up again in the Los Angeles Open. In most cases, he will have to qualify on Mondays with the "rabbits." That doesn't frighten him, either.

He has a $30,000 stake to start with, a no-strings-attached gift of his grandfather, and a built-in advisor-agent, his dad, who is in the athlete-management field.

"Dad has managed some of the leading race drivers for years," Cook said. "He has Mario Andretti, Johnny Rutherford and Al Unser, among others. He should be able to handle me."

John's grandfather is an affluent farmer and construction magnate in Columbus, having had a part in building many of the roads in Southern Ohio.

"My dad was going to help me at the beginning," Cook said. "But my granddad surprisingly handed me $30,000 and he said, 'Take this, and good luck.' "

It's figured that at least $30,000 is needed as a grub stake to tackle the tour. John and his family supporters want him to go first class.

"They say if you have to eat hot dogs, you play like one," Cook said.

Washington crew repeats Nile win

Cairo, Egypt (AP) — University of Washington rowers stroked their way to victory Thursday in a prestige eight-oar race in the ninth annual Nile River Regatta.

Fighting a headwind and choppy water, the Huskies crossed the finish line in five minutes, 55 seconds, 1¼-lengths ahead of Trinity College of Dublin, Ireland, and a crew from Leander, Eng-

A combined Vancouver Rowing Club-University of British Columbia crew finished a disappointing fourth in the eight-oar race and fifth in the four-oar competition.

Canadian coach John Cordonier explained that unlike last year, when Vancouver won the over-all competition and challenged the Huskies in the eight-oar, his team was made up of inexperienced rowers.

It was the second year in a row that Washington took the winner's trophy in the international competition for eight-oared crews.

Soviet tug helps rescue ship

PUNTA ARENAS, Chile (AP) — The Swedish cruise ship Lindblad Explorer, which ran aground Christmas Eve in the Antarctic, was pulled from undersea rocks Thursday with the aid of a Soviet tug, the Chilean navy said.

Eighty passengers and 32 crew members were transferred Christmas Day to the Chilean icebreaker Piloto Pardo after the Lindblad Explorer ran aground off Graham Land. No injuries were reported.

A skeleton crew of 21 men remained aboard.

The Chilean icebreaker, which remained with the cruise ship until Wednesday night, was expected to arrive at this port city in the Straits of Magellan on Sunday.

A navy spokesman in Punta Arenas, who asked not to be identified, said the Soviet tug Uragan helped pull the 2,346-ton Lindblad Explorer off the rocks.

The report was confirmed by navy public relations chief Capt. Alejandro Armstrong in Santiago, who said the cruise ship was towed to a sheltered bay for preliminary repairs.

Armstrong said the ship had eight punctures in its double hull, but the flooding was controlled and the ship was in no danger of sinking. He said it had partial use of its engines.

"The Lindblad Explorer was towed to Bransfield Straight where there are many protected bays," Armstrong said.

He also said the Norwegian tug Atlantic Greet was en route to the Lindblad Explorer and would render any further aid necessary.

Spokesmen for the Brostrom Line, the ship's owners, said earlier the vessel would be towed to drydocks in Talcahuano, where drydocks are available.

The navy source in Punta Arenas said the Atlantic Greet had been working on offshore oil drilling projects, operating out of Ushuia, Argentina.

Among the rescued passengers aboard the Piloto Pardo, reported Thursday night in the Sea of Drake and en route to Punta Arenas, were members of a Japanese-American film crew that had been working on the science fiction picture Virus, starring Chuck Connors and Olivia Hussey.

Ten killed in jail blaze

LANCASTER, S.C. (AP) — While prisoners yelled for help behind locked doors, a fire sent smoke billowing through a 156-year-old county jail, killing 10 prisoners two weeks before the building was scheduled to be closed.

Only three prisoners survived the fire Thursday night on the second floor of the Lancaster County jail, a two-storey masonry structure.

The county was scheduled to move the jail and offices of the sheriff's department in two weeks to a new building on the outskirts of Lancaster, officials said.

Two prisoners and a firefighter were taken to hospital with smoke inhalation.

Capt. Leon Gasque, assistant director of the state law enforcement division, said investigators have not determined how the fire started.

Hugh Munn, a division spokesman, said the jailer, L. C. McAteer, and a highway patrolman, L. N. Alexander, were on the second floor with the 13 prisoners when the fire broke out about supper time.

The cause of the 10 deaths was believed to be smoke inhalation.

Sheriff Nae Parks told reporters the jail has never been condemned but that the county had received a letter several months ago from the state corrections department saying that "certain deficiencies had to be corrected, and they were corrected." He declined to say what the deficiencies were.

N-plants in populated areas alarm

New York Times

WASHINGTON — A report drafted for the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission has tentatively recommended that serious consideration be given to closing any reactor whose operator is unable to develop plans to evacuate everybody living within a 48-kilometre radius of the reactor.

The draft report was prepared by the special group established by the commission to investigate the accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear plant last spring. It also calls for a halt in the construction of new reactors until far-reaching changes have been made in how the federal government regulates nuclear power.

A copy of a 100-page section of the draft report, dated Dec. 11, has been obtained by The New York Times.

Mitchell Rogovin, a Washington lawyer hired by the nuclear agency to undertake an independent review of the agency itself, said in response to an inquiry about the draft report that "very substantial changes and revisions have been made in many of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the draft."

Rogovin added that he was "extremely concerned lest a first preliminary draft, generated and disseminated for discussion purposes only, be taken to represent our conclusive views on any of the subjects covered."

The draft report was written by George T. Frampton, a partner in Rogovin's law firm. As deputy director of the special inquiry group, Frampton has played a major role in the $3 million investigation.

The report also recommends that the present five-member nuclear agency be abolished and replaced by an agency within the executive branch that would be headed by a single administrator, a suggestion that President Carter recently rejected.

The inquiry group report was highly critical of its parent organization, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. "In our opinion, the commission is incapable, in its present configuration, of managing a comprehensive national safety program for nuclear power plants adequate to insure the public health and safety," the report said.

It was particularly outspoken about how the commission went about granting approval for the construction and operation of new reactors.

The group is separate from the President's Commission on the Accident at Three Mile Island, which concluded on Oct. 30 that "fundamental changes" must be made in the way reactors are constructed.

Envoy's quitting hurts

DAMASCUS (Reuter) — The Syrian government, stung by the surprise defection of its ambassador to the United Nations, said Thursday night he resigned after being recalled for supporting the peace pact between Egypt and Israel.

In a first reaction to the resignation Thursday of Hammound el-Choufi, an official government source said the ambassador had been ordered home after adopting a stand contradictory to Syrian policy during the latest UN debate on the Middle East.

The source said Choufi collaborated openly with Egypt's UN delegate and came out in favor of the Camp David agreements on the Middle East, which led to the Egyptian-Israeli peace pact last March.

Syria has strongly opposed the peace moves that have also led to Egypt's isolation from most of the Arab world.

Choufi announced his resignation Thursday, accusing the government of President Hafez al-Assad of corruption, repression and opportunism.

Crackdown announced

ANKARA (Reuter) — The Turkish government recently announced a crackdown on political extremists, who killed 1,800 persons in gun or bomb attacks in 1979. Premier Suleyman Demirel has asked provincial governors, police and education officials to unite against violence in the streets, schools, offices and factories of the country.

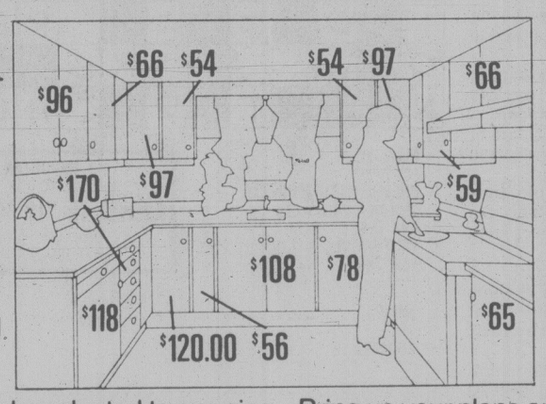
THE HTH PIECE PLAN.

How do you take the guesswork out of kitchen renovations?

Someone had to do it. Someone had to take the confusion out of cabinet buying. Our answer is the HTH Piece Plan. The basis of our plan is the HTH price list. This way you know exactly what you're paying for HTH cabinets – piece by piece. No guesstimates or hidden charges. You'll know what your cabinets cost to the penny.



Our modular units can be adapted to any size kitchen. You'll appreciate the extra care that has been given to craftsmanship. The inside of every cabinet has been finished with a plastic lamination that makes HTH cabinets so easy to clean. The drawers never stick because they're suspended on rollers. Pullout racks place pots and pans within easy reach. A shelf pulls out for sit-down work or as an extra breakfast/snack table.

HTH units come in six basic styles in light or dark oak, pine and mahogany with doors that are plain or profiled. Come in and talk over your renovation plans with us. We can advise you on cabinets and even arrange for installation.

Bring us your plans and we'll show you ours – the HTH Piece Plan.

The HTH kitchen shown here is the Light Oak style with 16 separate units in a space measuring 10' x 7'. The cost for cabinets only $1,557.00

Contract Bridge — B. Jay Becker

You are South, both sides vulnerable, and the bidding has gone:

West	North	East	South
1 ♢	Pass	Pass	?

What would you bid now with each of the following five hands?

1. ♠ 874 ♡ K93 ♢ AJ9 ♣ KJ82
2. ♠ A65 ♡ QJ6 ♢ AQ8 ♣ KQ73
3. ♠ KJ932 ♡ J85 ♢ 10 ♣ KJ64
4. ♠ J43 ♡ AK7 ♢ KQ9874 ♣ 3
5. ♠ AKQJ3 ♡ AJ4 ♢ 63 ♣ KQ6

1. One notrump. When you are in the balancing seat — that is, when the bidding would die at a low level if you passed — you may occasionally make bids you would not make in any other position. Bids made in the protective position often don't have their usual meaning.

A player in the balancing seat has only two choices — to compete against the part score or to pass. If he chooses to compete, he should not be held strictly accountable for any action he takes. Thus, the one notrump bid in this sequence does not show the normal complement of 16 to 18 points. On the contrary, it is often based on 11 or 12 points, and is rarely made with as many as 15 points.

2. Double. If you were North you almost surely would overcall West's one diamond bid with one notrump. But, since you are in the balancing seat, you cannot afford to bid one notrump because partner might think you have 4 or 5 points less than you actually have. Instead, you should double, planning to bid notrump later on.

3. One spade. It is better to bid one spade at this point than to pass. Partner probably has at least 10 points, which gives you a good shot at a part score and, conceivably, a game. You'd lose this opportunity if you elected to close the bidding by passing one diamond.

4. Pass. The best contract, as far as you can tell, is to let West play the hand in one diamond. Accordingly, you should pass. The fact that you have the values for an opening bid does not mean that you must necessarily announce them at this point. West will probably go down two or three tricks in one diamond — 200 or 300 points — and there is no good reason to disturb the situation as it stands.

5. Double. Here you have values that are utterly independent of your being in the protective seat. If you were North you would double, and as South you should take exactly the same action. True, your double is suspect when you are in the balancing position, but you hope later on to take strong action to identify your actual strength. It is much better to double than to bid two spades, which is strength-showing but not forcing.

U.K. announces Rhodesia vote set for Feb. 27

SALISBURY (Reuter) — Britain today announced that a general election will be held in Rhodesia from Feb. 27 to 29.

British Governor Lord Soames said 80 seats for blacks in the parliament of an independent Zimbabwe will be voted on during three days of polling.

The election will be monitored by a British supervisory commission and about 100 Commonwealth observers.

The British-supervised election is part of an overall peace agreement negotiated during 15 weeks of talks between the Salisbury government and Patriotic Front guerrillas to end the country's seven-year civil war.

A ceasefire was to be formally declared at midnight tonight.

Lord Soames said polling for 20 white seats will take place separately on Feb. 14.

Under the peace agreement, Rhodesia's minority whites — who broke away from Britain in 1965 — gave up the last vestiges of their control in the country but are guaranteed 20 of the 100 seats in parliament for at least seven years.

In the bi-racial parliament of national unity which handed over power to Lord Soames two weeks ago, 28 seats were reserved for whites who also had power to veto constitutional changes.

A statement issued at a news conference by British election commissioner Sir John Boynton said that after the elections all ballot papers will be sent to Britain, kept for six months and then destroyed.

"This new provision is designed to increase confidence in the secrecy of the ballot," he said. "It should encourage people to vote for the party of their choice without fear."

Meanwhile, a landmine blasted a police vehicle as it guided a team of Commonwealth monitoring troops into the bush in advance of the midnight truce.

A British military spokesman said several policemen were slightly injured inside the vehicle, but could provide no other details except that the incident occurred somewhere in the southwestern area of the country.

The developments occurred as lightly armed Commonwealth monitoring teams headed into the bush as the deadline for the ticklish truce neared.

The countdown to the cease-fire at one minute before midnight (2:59 p.m. PST today) began in an atmosphere made tense by the sudden death of the guerrillas' top commander, Josia Tongogara, in a Mozambique car crash.

Despite Tongogara's death, the truce operation went ahead as scheduled. A military spokesman said all monitoring teams and their Patriotic Front liaison officers would be in place by dusk to start receiving guerrillas emerging from the bush at remote campsites.

OPEC trio announce 10% boost

Associated Press

Iraq, Indonesia and Venezuela, which together produce one-quarter of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' oil, today announced price increases of up to 10 per cent.

After the Iraqi and Indonesian moves were disclosed, Venezuela — supplier of 3.5 per cent of U.S. oil needs — announced it was raising its base oil price by $2 U.S. to $26 per 42-gallon barrel.

The moves had been expected. But the latest hikes could prompt influential Saudi Arabia to announce a further price increase over the 33 per cent boost imposed along with Venezuela and two other OPEC members earlier this month.

Each $1 U.S. increase in the price of a barrel of oil means just less than one cent a litre, or just more than four cents an Imperial gallon, in Canadian funds.

Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani denied in Paris Thursday his country has decided to raise its price by $2 in February, but said "oil price increases are determined by the market, and Saudi oil prices are currently below those prevailing on the international market."

Iran funds plea quashed

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — The International Monetary Fund Thursday rejected a plea by Iran that the IMF condemn or otherwise attempt to reverse the U.S. freeze of $8 billion in Iranian financial assets.

It was a major diplomatic and psychological victory for the United States, which "had a very good case," a senior IMF official said.

The IMF's decision, taken here by the 21 executive directors representing more than 130 countries, did not involve a formal vote. It would normally have been announced Saturday, but Iran, seeing which way the decision was going, requested a 30-day delay in the formal announcement, which presumably will be made in a few weeks.

The decision by the IMF executive directors is not reversible. Coming, as it does, just before the United Nations is to consider a U.S. request for economic sanctions against Iran, it is a psychological boost for the U.S. position.

IMF officials explained that, even had they been sympathetic to Iran's request, there was no effective move the agency could have taken to undo the U.S. freeze. But a vote of sympathy for the Iranians would have been important to Iran as it seeks to swing world opinion to its side in its battle with the United States.

Officials said the United States had "an open-and-shut case" because any nation confronted with a threat to its national security is entitled to take steps to protect itself.

Meanwhile, in Iran today, fighting erupted in Tabriz, capital of the northwest Azerbaijan region, and members of the dissident Azari Turks' political party wounded one Revolutionary Guard and took 10 other Khomeini men hostage, the official Pars news agency said.

Pars, quoting the Revolutionary Guard office in Tabriz, said the attack began Thursday night when an unidentified group set fire to a pavilion set up for Friday prayers.

In another development, Iranian government spokesman said some officials of the ruling Revolutionary Council are pressing for the release soon of three hostages, despite opposition by militants who hold some 50 Americans at the U.S. Embassy.

The Associated Press news agency received word from a foreign ministry spokesman of an official "suggestion" that three hostages of Mexican, Indian and Portuguese descent be released. A spokesman for the militants holding the hostages reacted angrily when told of the report.

City teachers to get 9.28%

The 1,280 public school teachers in Greater Victoria have been granted a 9.28 per cent pay increase by an arbitration board.

Several contracts remain to be settled in other districts before year-end, but the provincial average to date has been a 9.45-per-cent increase.

Vancouver and West Vancouver's 3,370 teachers, with which Victoria teachers sought parity, gained 9.1 per cent in arbitration.

Last month Greater Victoria Teachers' Association proposed an 11.52 per cent increase and a mediation officer proposed 9.5, which teachers accepted and Greater Victoria School District rejected, sending the dispute to arbitration.

In its budget calculations the district had allowed for an 8.5-per-cent increase for teacher salaries, the same as public employees had been getting. In negotiations the board proposed 8 per cent for teachers.

Greater Victoria is the last district on southern Vancouver Island to settle its 1980 teacher salaries. Sooke District 62 gave its teachers 9.5 per cent the first year of a two-year contract with the second year to be based on cost-of-living, and Saanich District 63 agreed to 9 per cent, both without going to arbitration.

Among other contracts which went to arbitration are Castlegar, 9.62 per cent; Trail, 9.58 per cent; Kettle Valley, 9.98 per cent; Revelstoke, 9.51 per cent, and Williams Lake, 8.75 per cent.

Another 11 contracts must be settled by arbitration before Tuesday.

The railway town of Swindon, in western England, was the unlikely scene of a Christmas coincidence, when Mary, the wife of Joseph, a carpenter, gave birth to a son on Christmas Day. But Mr. and Mrs. Austin decided to call their new arrival, who was born at 15 minutes past midnight, after his father — Joseph Charles.

Comedian Bob Hope celebrated the Christmas season this year with something besides his usual television special — he and his family have finally moved in to the house he started building some eight years ago. Hope's wife, Dolores, moved into the modern, mushroom-shaped residence and the couple is entertaining the families of their four adopted children over the holidays. Construction began in 1972, but on July 24, 1973, the home was gutted by a fire ignited by sparks from a welder's torch. The $500,000 loss was covered by insurance.

Hope

Raymond Sansbury's seven children on happily tore the wrapping off dozens of colorful Christmas packages that poured in from around the country after the $112-a-week garbageman was arrested for taking discarded items from a Darlington, S.C. dump for Chistmas gifts. "It's restored my faith in people," Sansbury said. "I didn't realize so many people cared, but people really do care about one another." Four-year-old Tyrone, wandered around the four-room frame house Christmas morning with a new teddy bear in tow as Sansbury, 33, and his wife, Edell, 28, looked on. Sansbury was arrested last week on a trespassing charge for picking up discarded shoes and clothing at the dump. For health and safety reasons, South Carolina law prohibits unauthorized persons from taking items from dumps.

For the second year in a row, fire spoiled Christmas for Miami policeman Juan Santos and his family. "Something like this is just bizarre," said Dade County fireman Ed Baum, who helped douse both blazes and worked with the family to rescue sooty, water-soaked presents from a blackened tree. Two days before Christmas 1978, Santos, a six-year police veteran, was badly burned and the home he had worked hard to build was badly damaged in an accidental gasoline explosion. This year, on Christmas Eve, a pan of hot grease ignited and the home, still being repaired, suffered even more damage.

Dear Abby:

We need advice desperately. We have a dear young relative (married a year) whose house looks like a disaster area.

Would it be wrong to ask if we could go in and clean it up for her?

Absolutely Anonymous

Dear Absolutely:

There's a wise old truism, 'Give a man a fish and he can eat for a day; teach him how to fish, and he can eat for a lifetime.'

Dear Abby:

In a recent column a woman complained that her husband was not allowed to play tennis on a certain tennis court because he wasn't 'properly attired.' You said you didn't know why for sure, but it was probably because white looks better and is cooler.

Well, I know the reason. White clothing does not show perspiration the way colored clothing does, and tennis players sweat a lot.

Martha Post

Dear Martha:

Your explanation sounds reasonable. But read on for a few others:

Tennis Pro

Tennis players are required to wear white on the courts because if the players were permitted to wear colored clothes, you'd have stripes, wild patterns in clashing colors, and a mess of distracting designs. It might distract other players.

Reasoned It Out

Why do tennis players have to dress in white? Simple: Because white is cooler — it reflects sunlight.

Common Sense

Tennis players must dress uniformly because it's the democratic way. When they all wear the same, nobody looks any richer or better dressed [illegible] or opponents.

Peter

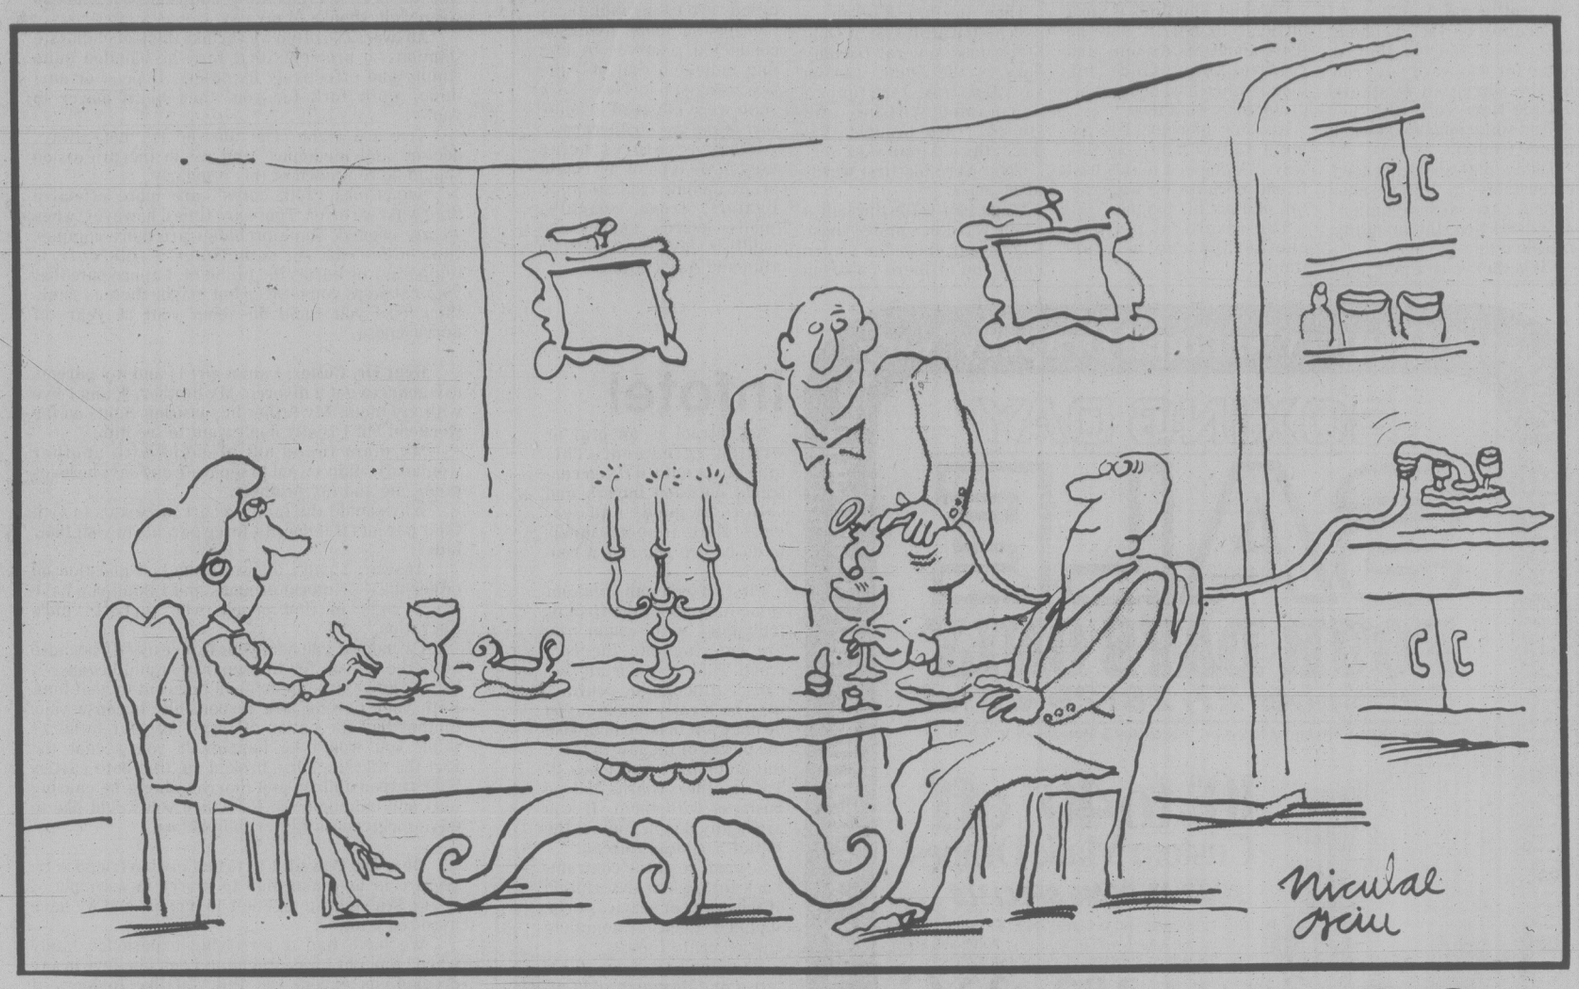
Dear Abby:

What do you think of a minister who stands outside a porno movie theatre to see how many people he knows go in?

Just Asking

Dear Just:

He's not very bright. Some of the people he knows might see him standing there and think he just came out.



'Almost' fads challenge 80s

By ENID NEMY
New York Times

Bill Blass, and others, have no doubt that the decade to come will engender not only major changes in life style but also a whole crop of both serious and ephemeral fads. But Blass concedes that it's going to be pretty hard to surpass some of the things that could have happened during the 1970s.

At different times he was asked, and refused, to lend his name to:

—Designer motorcycle helmets.

—Designer teeth braces.

—Designer coffins.

"Where else is there to go?" he asked, only half in jest.

Still, he's willing to make a stab at predicting some possibilities.

"People are going to eat fat foods and exercise will be out," he said. "They're bored with the whole diet and nouvelle cuisine thing, and with jogging and tennis."

It is only fair to mention that Blass loves fattening food. He diets, but hates it, and loathes exercise.

Blass said he was also willing to go on record on the subject of drinking.

"We're going to drink only tap water," he said, sloughing off, in no time flat, all the fancy, status-y bottled waters. "Or maybe gin," he added.

Andy Warhol, a dedicated partygoer, foresaw a glum future for his favorite pastime. "People won't be able to afford anything," said Warhol. "I wouldn't be surprised if we had 'bring your own' parties."

Nan Kempner, also no slouch at going to, and giving, parties, has discovered what she calls "nursery" foods, and is convinced that they are the trend of the 80s.

"Everyone is tired of fancy concoctions," she said, explaining why she thinks that bread pudding, tapioca pudding, apple brown betty, custard, chicken hash and anything pureed have a great party future.

"And there's also a whole mental thing connected with these foods," she said. "They bring back your childhood and make you feel someone cares about you."

Jeff Perlman, a co-owner of The Party Box, a catering company, said he was seeing a shift to a lot of "heavy cocktail buffets" rather than dinners. He dismissed cocktail franks, quiche, pate and egg rolls as boring, and reported a sharp drop in the popularity of crudites.

"People aren't nibbling at cocktail parties," he said. "They're eating more bread and meat, and instead of saying 'this will spoil my dinner,' it is their dinner."

Overstylized and gimmicky flower arrangements — "flowers tied with raffia" — are on their way out, according to Jim Goslee of Goslee Associates.

"We'll have something like a special lily in a Chinese vase," he said.

Ronaldo Maia, the floral designer, said he was into pigs.

"They're round and wonderful and close to the earth," he said. His pigs are done in moss, with a small gold bow on the tail, and replace the moss teddy bears he sold by the carload, almost, in past seasons.

"People are trying to get humor out of anything," he said by way of explanation.

There would, too, be many more leaves used than flowers because of the economy and the easier way of living.

"There will be a lot of leaves and one flower coming out of them," he said.

Arnold Scaasi, the designer, was willing to let well enough alone. He was, he said, thrilled with the current interest in "pretty" clothes.

"I'm just happy that we've gotten rid of all those terrible layers and all that loose clunkin' around," he said. "I just hope the mini doesn't come back — all those knock-knees."

"If we have a really bad energy crisis, I can see whole new furniture designs," said Mario Buatta, an interior designer. "We may have zip-in furniture, and we could all be sleeping in down bags that zip from head to toe."

"There's going to be less of everything, starting with bric-a-brac and going on to paintings," said Ward Bennett, products and interior designer. "We're going to see less of that status floor-to-ceiling art. There will be one painting on a wall and if people have a lot of paintings, they'll change them every so often."

"Due to the new energy code, we won't be living in glass houses anymore," he continued. "The kind of thing at Olympic Towers will be past imperfect."

John Loring, the design director at Tiffany's, ranged far and wide in his prophecies.

The brown flannel suit for men is going to become respectable, he said, as is letter writing on yellow legal pads rather than monogrammed note paper.

"What could be more handsome than a yellow legal pad?" he asked. "It's a great modern object that people just take for granted."

He believes as well that decorative arts — ceramics, glass, metals, fabrics, rugs — will replace the fine arts of the last two decades, and that the "antiques" of the 1910s and 1920s, especially the "wonderful furniture and objects designed by Americans," will be discovered in a major way.

If the cosmetic companies could figure out how to package cool climates and salt-water baths, they would make a bundle in the 1980s. That's the theory of William Fine, the chairman of Frances Denney.

"It's a truism that cool climates keep the skin from aging," he said. "There's an energy overtone there, but how we package it is something we haven't come up with."

Fine said he also hadn't figured out how to package what he had been told was absolutely the best body moisturizer — a handful of coarse salt in bath water. He added a further bit of free advice.

"Wait until the salt melts before you get in the tub," he said. "Otherwise, you'll get a scratchy fanny."

And that is no way to enter a new decade.

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Is it harmful for my husband to go all day without food and eat only one meal at night? He drinks a pack of beer every day and is not overweight. I worry myself sick over this.

Mrs. S.S.

Dear Mrs. S.:

I gather from your letter that you are paying a greater penalty than is your husband for the strange diet he has chosen. Worrying yourself sick over someone who is well does not make too much sense, does it? Undoubtedly, he prefers to consume his calories in the form of beer rather than a health-building eating program.

In general, missing breakfast and lunch is not considered conducive to sustained energy and health. The body requires not only a sensible caloric intake, but also a daily program of well-balanced nutritional foods, including vitamins and minerals. Is it likely that he is getting all this in one concentrated meal?

Some people mistakenly believe that if they skip one or two meals each day they will be able to keep their weight down. However, the chances are great that one concentrated meal will contain as many calories as three meals distributed over the course of the day.

Dear Doctor:

I am 43 years old, and have two children. I would like to start jogging. One of my doctors agrees; the other does not. How do you feel about it?

Mrs. E.W.

Dear Mrs. W.:

Your doctors must have very specific reasons for coming to their own conclusions. Have you asked them to consult with each other to see if they can come to a mutual decision that would help you decide whether to go ahead with a jogging program?

Instead of adding my personal opinion, I would rather tell you that not all doctors agree that women of your age should begin a program of jogging. Dr. Alan G. Charles, of the Michael Reese Hospital in Chicago, says, "Women are just not built for jogging. I've seen a dozen women in the past year who suffer from prolapse of the uterus and the bladder and the rectum."

Dr. Charles Greenhouse, of Silver Spring, Md., a consultant with the national Jogging Association, completely disagrees. He says, "Jogging does not cause prolapsed (fallen) uterus. It only exaggerates a condition that already exists." However, Dr. Greenhouse agrees that older women who have given birth to more than one child should use caution when taking up jogging.

As you can see, there is no universal agreement on this subject.

Pets fill shrink's role

By CHRIS ROBERTS

NEW YORK (AP) — A monk was taking a moonlight stroll years ago when he overheard a young tough — who wouldn't talk to the school psychiatrist — pouring out his troubles to a Russian wolfhound.

Because of the incident, officials at Lincoln Hall, a home for wayward boys run by the Christian Brothers outside New York City, acquired some dogs to do what people couldn't.

Today, pets are being used extensively in the psychological care of the emotionally disturbed, the mentally retarded and the aged.

"Whether it is a dog, cat, lizard or mouse, pets do not react to the color of a person's skin, his uncombed hair, his dirty clothes or substandard speech," says Dr. Boris Levinson, a psychologist and pioneer in the field.

"A child who finds it most difficult to tell us how he feels about his dreams and relationships finds his tongue when he discusses his problems with a dog."

Take the case of Jed, who in 1949 was admitted to the Castle Nursing Home in Millersburg, Ohio, after suffering apparent brain damage in a fall. Doctors believed the accident had left him deaf and mute.

Then in 1975, Corson, a psychiatry professor at Ohio State, took several friendly dogs to the home. Corson says Jed stroked the fur of a dog named Whiskey and smiled. "You brought that dog," the old man said.

They were his first words in 26 years.

"You can walk through a whole ward in some of these homes and they don't even know you're there," Corson says.

"But if you bring in a pet, they brighten up. An animal offers a patient love, attention and acceptance without criticism."

There are no recent studies to show how many institutions are using animals as therapeutic tools. Levinson conducted a survey in 1972 that indicated that half the psychologists in New York state were engaged in some sort of pet psychotherapy.

Other creatures being used in tis type of psychotherapy include cats, ants, alligators, frogs, seagulls, snails, lizards, snakes and goldfish, says the American Humane Association.

youth clinic

Dear Dr. Levine: I read about the boy who didn't like to sleep alone and I suggest he get a pet. I have always been nervous but do not believe in taking pills. A living creature, a dog or a cat, sleeping on a bed is a great comfort.

It would take him out of himself and make him think about somebody else. Take it from someone who has been nervous for 20-odd years but who can sleep well, thanks to my cat.

Answer: Too often we shrinks think of elaborate solutions to problems that may be handled quite simply and effectively by others. If pets, or anything, work fork for you, then more power to you!

You are right. The answer is "not always doctors and medicine" and we in the profession should be reminded of this regularly.

Sometimes "folk cures" are more effective than what we offer. There are times, however, when we are needed. Some problems are more complex than meet the ye; sometimes a folk cure is temporary or buries the problem. I appreciate that your cat helps you to sleep but maybe there is something else you could do about your 20 years of nervousness.

Dear Dr. Cotter: I am a girl 14 and my parents are going to get a divorce. My brother, 9, and I live with my mom. My father has visiting rights on the weekend but I really don't want to see him.

My mom found out he slept with another woman. He didn't want to separate and says he loves mom, me and my brother.

Why should the family court force kids to visit their parents if it doesn't force parents to visit their kids?

Answer: I can't answer your last question on either legal or moral grounds and I think you have every right to find people who support "kid's liberation."

I wonder if you hate your father mostly because he is the reason for the separation and because it breaks up your home to have to go out to visit him. Both your parents are responsible, because your mother had the option of forgiving your father. I think you would be happier if you accept the fact the marriage has broken up, that both parties bear responsibility, and that you might be causing hurt and unhappiness, for which you would like to have forgiveness rather than hatred.

Dear Dr. Powell: I'm 15 and my boyfriend is 18. We are in love and plan to marry in a couple of years. We've been together 10 months and we have matured a lot.

We have had a terrifying experience lately when I thought I was pregnant. I don't believe in any precautions except the Pill. I'd like to know if there's any way I can get it without parents' consent. I asked my mom but she doesn't understand why I need it. If someone else was to get it, pretending it was for herself, and then give it to me, would it be effective?

I'm in need of help amd many other girls are, too.

Answer: There are a number of contraception methods besides the Pill available at your pharmacy. If condoms are used properly, following the directions on the package, they are very effective. Contraceptive foam or cream is also available without a prescription. When condoms and foam are used together, they are almost as effective as the Pill.

I also urge you to tell your mother why you want the Pill. Ask her to go with you to the clinic or to your doctor and talk about sexuality, contraception and today's teenagers.

Many clinics and doctors will prescribe a contraceptive for you but it is better if your boyfriend went along to the clinic.

Having a friend obtain a prescription for you will deny you information and counselling. The answers you need can only be given in a person-to-person setting.

Dear Mr. Vichert: My problem is not uncommon, I'm sure, but it depresses me every weekend. I can't get dates and the rare times I do, I've never been asked out by the fellow a second time.

I have much going for me (personality, wide range of interests, attractive) and I'm not a hustler. However, I am not involved in clubs as I work on afternoon shift every other week.

I work with 15 young men but only one has asked me out since I started working there six months ago. Yet, they are always coming over to talk with me. I know a few assume I'm seeing someone outside the office.

Should I make it known I'd like to join the guys on their group outings? Is my "problem" partly because Im an only child and have led a sheltered life?

Answer: Since you have a lot going for you, I assume you are not getting dates because people believeyou have have a steady boyfriend. I don't think your problem is that you are an only child, but rather a problem of communication. How can you let some of the men at work know you would like to continue the conversation afterwards? It would be appropriate to suggest some way to young men that interest you that you would like to date. A group of people working together can transmit information rapidly. If you let one young men know you are interested in dating, it may not take long for word to get around. Your problem then may be how to turn down some of the young men without hurting their feelings.

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel including Marion Powell, physician; Graham Cotter, clergyman; Dr. Saul Levine, psychiatrist, and social worker Bruce Vichert.

Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria V8W 2N4. Readers wishing to talk with someone about their problems can call NEED at 386-6233.

A contract is an oral or written agreement. This tape deals with written contracts between buyers and sellers of goods and services. Here are eight things to do before you sign a contract.

First, if you can, find out something about the firm or individual with whom you are entering into the contract. This is important because, although the contract may be legally binding, you do not want to have to invoke the power of the law to force the other party to honor it. Talk to others who have done business with them. If you are in any doubt, contact the Better Business Bureau.

Second, read the contract. Look for a clear description of the goods or services to be supplied. Look for complete and accurate figures.

This topic is one of 135 taped by Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada.

For the entire tape, telephone Victoria Consumer Infotel, 592-1251, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday and until 4 p.m. Friday. Ask for tape C40. A complete list of tape topics available in the Victoria free calling area can be picked up at any Greater Victoria public library, or either of the provincial or federal consumer and corporate affairs offices in Victoria.

Dear Mike:

Whenever I come off the freeway and stop to enter city traffic, the V-6 in my 1978 Mustang dies. It always restarts easily, but what makes it die? Local experts haven't been able to fix it.

Ticked

Dear Ticked:

Gasoline sloshing inside the carburetor float chamber could be one cause. Have a mechanic check the float level. Another possibility is low idle speed, but I suspect that's been suspected.

Dear Mike:

I drive a 1964 Skylark convertible. It's in mint condition, but I do have a problem with water getting into the trunk. The weatherstripping is perfect. How do I find out where the leak is?

Waterlogged

Dear Logged:

Assuming your top is watertight and that there aren't any rust-outs in the floor of your trunk, check the bottom of your spare well. Sometimes there's a round plug that comes loose and lets water splash in. It's also possible that moisture is condensing inside your luggage compartment.

Dear Mike:

I have a 1978 Firebird with the 350 V-8 and High Energy Ignition. The engine developed a miss, so I removed the plastic "halo" that holds the eight ignition wires in the distributor. I had the ring off and removed the wires one by one (found a cracked plug). My problem now is that I can't get this plastic "halo" to go back on the distributor. I hate to force it too much. Is there any trick to getting it back on?

Frustrated

Dear Frustrated:

You've got the ring turned 180 degrees. You'll find two little notches in one side of it. If you've put the wires back wrong, these notches won't line up with tangs on the distributor housing.

Dear Mike:

It's becoming very hard to find parts for our 1964 Studebaker 6. I've heard that there's an outfit that bought out the factory's old parts stock. Do you have a name and address?

Larking

Dear Lark:

You problably mean Newman and Altman, Inc., 405 W. Sample St., South Bend, Ind. 46621. This company manufactures the Avanti II but also publishes a parts catalogue and stocks many obsolete Studebaker parts.

Arts bucks future dim

By NORMAN GIDNEY

After a period of "extraordinary development and expansion" on the Victoria cultural scene in the decade just ending, local arts observer Allan Purdy foresees a period of retrenchment and cutbacks for drama groups, music societies and orchestras in the 1980s.

"My common sense tells me they're in big trouble," he says. "They've become totally dependent on public funds.

"I'm a little paranoid at the moment. I'm looking at all these applications and I'm scared stiff at what will happen if government funding is reduced."

Governments are providing as much as 75 per cent of the budgets of some groups and "this is causing me great concern," says Purdy, an insurance adjuster with a long string of cultural credentials.

They include many years as a performer and producer on both the amateur and professional side, and more recently as a sort of consultant-catalyst on the local scene.

The day of reckoning may come as soon as early in the new year, Purdy says.

"I would expect to hear of arts groups in B.C. closing their doors soon. Whether or not many will go under in Victoria is difficult to determine — some will hang on."

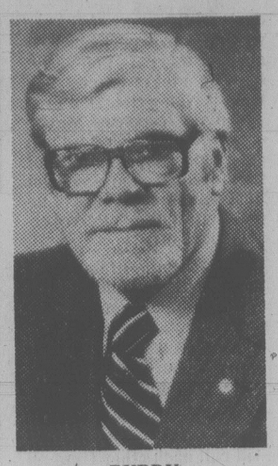
He points out that several local groups — the Bastion Theatre and Victoria Symphony Orchestra among them — have mounted extremely ambitious fundraising campaigns for the next two years. Added together, they total more than $1¼ million, which is several times what they've been able to raise from the public in the last 10 years.

Of all the local groups, Purdy says the Victoria Art Gallery and the Conservatory of Music are "probably the only two who have achieved self-sustaining financing.

"They don't have stifling deficits," he says.

Purdy says he maintains an "optimistically cynical" attitude towards the financial future of the arts in Victoria.

"I'm hopeful we can find a solution to this situation, but we're going to have to retrench."



PURDY
. . .scared stiff

On the artistic side, Purdy sees a similar kind of retrenchment coming in the 1980s.

"I think there's going to be a period of stabilization. I also think there will be less experimentation. In the performing arts there'll be a tendency for arts groups to aim at, quote, 'entertainment' and less at, quote, 'art'," says Purdy.

"That appears to be the thing audiences want to go to in the next few years," he adds.

"In a positive sense, I'd hope that in the '80s we start to improve the quality, rather than just churning out quantity. To many arts groups exist just for the sake of doing something. I'd like to see less but better art."

Among all the change of the 1970s in the arts community, Purdy also identifies an important development. Politicians now are active supporters of the arts. At the municipal level and in the provincial cabinet, culture has important advocates.

"I've improved my respect for local politicians enormously," he says, singling out Victoria Ald. Ron McKenzie for praise, along with Isabel Craig and Shirley Dowell on Oak Bay council and Saanich's Howard Sturrock.

Public funding of the arts from all governments now approaches $1 million a year, Purdy points out, and it's been placed on a professional basis. No longer are grants being handed out on a purely political basis.

Local councils have entrusted the job to an intercultural committee of representatives from different arts groups. "You've got to give them credit for that."

"I don't think the politicians are letting us down. Arts groups have to catch up."

They're going to have to have a more credible story when they come asking for funds, he says.

What's ahead in the 1980s? "We've got high hopes for Victoria as an arts centre," says Purdy.

He's helped promote the idea of "a little Geneva" on the Pacific rim, where Pacific nations could come to exchange cultural messages and participate in social, economic and industrial activities. The new conference centre on the waterfront will bring delegates to conventions who will want to partake of Vicoria's cultural offerings.

Direction for women offered by Camosun

The role of women in Canadian history and how women might prepare themselves for new directions in their lives will be discussed in three Camosun College courses opening next month.

Purpose and expression of women's role in society starts with a look at the past: The Visible Past: Women in Canadian History, a course to be held at Lansdowne campus each Tuesday starting Jan. 15, 1-3 p.m., and running six weeks.

One hundred years of women's contributions, including the landmark court judgments recognizing women as persons in the law, will be exposed by lectures, films and field trips under instructor Barbara Latham.

Shifting Gears for Middle Years is the title of an Options for Women course designed to illustrate personal development, technical skills, credit courses and employment and community access perspectives.

This course is offered at both Gordon Head Community Centre and Esquimalt Recreation Centre, for eight weeks from Jan. 15 each Tuesday morning.

A third offering is Change by Choice, for women of all ages, designed as group discussions under a skilled leader to explore potential, how to take the first steps toward new directions, and counselling to determine personal goals and values.

There will be two locations, Centennial United Church Monday and Wednesday mornings commencing Jan. 14, and Reynolds Senior Secondary Tuesday and Thursday evenings starting Jan. 22.

Registrations are being taken immediately and additional information may be obtained from Camosun's community education services, 592-1281.

New food market will have surprises

TORONTO (CP) — David Nichol, president of Loblaws Ltd., says the decade ahead is a dismal one for the food business but it promises surprises for the consumer.

"Our disposable income is going to be decimated. When your eight-per-cent mortgage comes up for renewal at 15 per cent and the price of gas has doubled, what is the one area of disposable income that you can cut back? Food."

Don Tigert, senior financial analyst for Burns Fry Ltd., agrees. "There will be a steady erosion of buying power in the '80s."

There also will be lots of new stores, predicts Tigert, particularly combination stores — twice as big as today's supermarket with one-half devoted to non-food items.

Tim Carter, food division manager for the Retail Council of Canada, says one-stop shopping will be important in an age of rising gasoline prices and profit-hungry merchants who know non-food items have a greater markup than most grocery items.

Another change for the '80s will be the demise of the can, says Roman Dacyshyn, president of the Hamilton-based Magic Pantry food company. His firm maufactures food in retort pouches, which Dacyshyn believes is the way of the future.

Foil retort bags containing cabbage rolls and chicken a la king — just pop them into boiling water minutes before you eat them — are already on the shelves. They need no refrigeration and have a shelf life of about two years.

Food processed in the retort method requires one-third the energy used for canned food, takes up less room and saves supermarkets the expense of energy-guzzling freezers.

Dacyshyn says his Hamilton firm is the only company in North America turning out retort foods on a continuous production run, and he hopes to win a government contract next month to supply Canada's armed forces with retort meals.

Also look to the coming decade for new food items. Sugar snap peas, already available in some Loblaws stores in Toronto, were developed in Idaho a year ago. With both the peas and pods edible, the new strain has become a rage in the U.S.

Karen Caplan, a director of Frieda's Finest — the largest wholesaler of exotic fruits and vegetables in North America — predicts that cherimoya and jicama will be on people's plates during the next decade.

"Cherimoya is an artichoke-green fruit that looks like a hand grenade," she says while jicama (pronounced Heek-ama) is a Mexican potato that looks like a turnip.

Travel clubs can offer you insight and saving

joan watson
for consumers

It's not too early to start thinking about next summer's vacation. Where to go, what to do and how to pay for it.

Well, some experienced travellers have found one way to beat the cost and get an insider's view of the places they visit.

They belong to clubs like the Canadian Holiday Home Exchange of Vancouver, or the Vacation Exchange Club, Inc., of New York. Members exchange their homes with club members in other areas, all over Canada and the U.S., as well as Great Britain, Europe and Central America. The Vacation Exchange Club even has listings from South America, Asia, Australia and New Zealand.

Members pay a fee to list their homes and vacation preferences (dates and locations) as well as other pertinent information, in the club's directory. Then they check the other listings to find someone with whom to exchange homes for a set period. Not only do they save money, but they get to see other lands more as a resident than as a tourist.

One Toronto exchanger told us, "It's terrific. We've exchanged three times — to Holland, England and Germany — and they've all been very successful.

"We travel with small children. The first year, they were 5, 7 and 9, and we just couldn't hack a hotel. What they want to do is not found in a hotel. So we deliberately looked for families that had small chhildren, and got houses that had children living in them. There were some toys, there was a yard they could play in, and even bicycles for them to ride."

Home exchange clubs have been active in Europe for some time now, and the Vacation Exchange Club has been in operation since 1960. The members we've talked to are more than satisfied.

Sometimes it takes a while to get a response, but "... don't be discouraged — keep writing," an experienced exchanger told us. "You've got to write a lot of letters. You want it, you write. Don't expect many responses. Maybe one-third of your letters will get a reply. But keep track of those people who say 'Not this year, maybe next.' and try them again." Perseverance pays off.

Mary DiBaldo of the Vacation Exchange Club tells us that the inclusion of telephone numbers in the listing along with people's occupations has increased the number of exchanges.

"People can reach each other more easily. People will call each other from all over the world ... They're delighted to get an enquiry by telephone. When you hear someone's voice, you know they're real."

She understands the reserve that you might feel about opening your house to a stranger, that someone could just walk in and make off with some of your valuables. "If this is going to be a terrible preoccupation with you, then maybe you shouldn't exchange. If you're going to spend your whole trip worrying about losing this or that, or are they breaking this or that, it's going to ruin your vacation. The idea is to get away so you can relax.

"You have to remember that every exchange is a two-way street. The other family probably has the same concerns about you. We find that when there's no exchange of money, people seem to have an attitude of honor or respect for other people's property."

One exchanger told us, "We never really put anything away. We left the sterling silver in the drawers. We've had no problems. If anything was broken, people have replaced it.

"We left the antiques where they were. We thought about putting them away, but in the end, it was too much trouble.

"If something is important to you in your own house, put it away. Some of our kids' toys were very precious to them. So we put them in a box on a shelf at the top of a closet, with a note saying 'Please do not touch.' People have respected that."

Another exchanger from Montreal gently pointed out that "if your're going to be robbed, nobody is going to come from Salzburg, Austria to do it."

But hou should be careful. You can tell a lot about people from their letters and phone calls. Ask for photographs of their place, and even references. Take these letters seriously.

Don't be afraid to weed out potential problems. If someone describes himself as a casual housekeeper, will they come up to your standardss?

If you are worried about your house, you won't have a good vacation. But remember, if you do exchange, your house won't be standing empty while you're away. Someone will be living in it.

At the other end, you get to really live in the place you choose, not just experience it as a tourist. You get to shop in the neighborhood stores, meet the local inhabitants over the back fence, and generally get a view of life that tourists rarely get.

Most exchangers inform their neighbours that someone is coming, and arrange for the visitor to call on them for help. Maps of the area and instructions for the appliances help too.

Sometimes, exchangers make good friends in the places they say, and arrange to return year after year.

In some cases, people who are considering retiring to a distant location join the exchange club to get a chance to try living there, before they commit themselves to the move.

The number of exchangers is increasing annually, and for $35 you can get your home listed in the Canadian Holiday Home Exchange. For information, write to them at P.O. Box 2416, Vancouver, B.C. V6B 3W7.

For $15.00 U.S., you can be listed by the Vacation Exchange Club of New York. Write them at Vacation Exchange Club, 250 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10013.

'Everyone wants to get into the act," says Ms. DiBaldo. "One fellow wrote us saying he'd like to exchange his accommodations, and he wasn't particular where he went. He'd go anywhere in the world — South America sounded terrific. But all he had was a large single room, 9 x 12, with all the facilities shared with others. He thought only a man should exchange with him, he didn't know how the other people would regard a woman on the premises — there were many restrictions on the grounds, but the people were very nice. Then we looked at the address ... It was from a federal prison, and he wanted to exchange his cell!"

So, have fun — but read those letters carefully!

By JOHN GOUDAS

No doubt, soap opera fans are a loyal breed. One such fan is Judy McCormick of Milwaukee, Wis., who started watching Edge of Night as a child, then tragically contracted sight-robbing glaucoma when she was 18. But Judy, regarding the cast as family, continued to "watch" the mystery oriented soap. In her enthusiasm, she made monthly calls since 1973 to the show's executive producer, Erwin Nicholson, to keep up with the story and send regards to the actors.

"I wish I could meet them all," Judy often said.

On December 14, the Edge of Night cast granted Judy's wish, giving her a day she'll never forget.

Judy, who hadn't flown before, jetted from Milwaukee to New York and was greeted upon arrival by dashing Tony Craig (Draper Scott), who escorted Judy through her magical day.

After "watching" the taping of the program from the control booth, Judy was taken to the set of Draper's law office, where she met the entire cast and crew, and received a couple of special Christmas presents. Joel Crothers (Dr. Miles Cavanaugh) gave her story tapes for the blind that he recorded himself and Ann Flood (Nancy Karr), in a spurt of sentimentality, took off a pin she was wearing and gave it to Judy. The pin had special significance since the actress has worn it daily on camera for the past 20 years. Judy was especially touched since she still has a visual recollection of a younger Ann Flood from the days when she was able to see.

One of the most poignant moments came when Judy was guided through the studio feeling her way around the sets, becoming acquainted with the layout so that she can get a better picture in her mind of what the actors are doing when she returns to her home to continue her marathon "viewing" of her favorite soap.

Her busy day reached an appropriate climax when Judy was guest of honor at the gala Edge of Night Christmas party held at the Gramercy Park Players Club.

"I love you all," said Judy, as she was taken to the airport for her flight home.

Channel Chatter: Nicolette Goulet, recently killed off as Mary on Ryan's Hope, has already joined Search for Tomorrow, in the role of Kathy Phillips which was originated by Courtney Sherman. In the storyline, Kathy has left her husband Scott, who's drinking again, and returns to Henderson with their son Eric...

Recently we informed viewers that New York Giants' linebacker Harry Carson was an avid soap opera fan. Well, One Life to Live picked up on that and chose Harry for an appearance which aired December 26. Harry appeared in the role of Frank Big Bird Sparrow, captain of the Cougars football team, owned by the Buchanan family. Who knows, we might see more of Harry in the future...

Plot Portents: Little Dougie had a most unusual Christmas present on Days of Our Lives, learning Doug was his true father, not Robert. Will Robert accept Doug? Also, Stephen's grandiose plans for marrying Mary haven't taken her true feelings into consideration.

What kind of professional model is Nikki on The Young and the Restless? She won't go all the way for her clients, and that spells trouble. Casey really likes baby Brooks, as her motherly instincts are blossoming.

Jackie has an accident on Guiding Light. Roger bugs Barbara's house, while Ed has a close call and Lucille denounces Ben's return to Amanda.

Jack is furious with the guilt-ridden Siobhan on Ryan's Hope. Delia goes into business and Kim goes after Adam.

Brooke makes a shocking revelation about Eddie on All My Children. Phoebe visits Ruth and just doesn't know how to keep her mouth shut, while Nina has an important visitor.

Dentists brush up on future methods

By PAT McCORMACK
UPI Health Editor

When dentists hang up their drills, put on their best or most casual threads and head for an annual convention, what happens?

They wine, dine, run up expense accounts, and hear the latest.

Here are some of the things they heard when swapping reports at the annual convention of the American Dental Association in Dallas and at the Greater New York Dental Meeting.

A little magic isn't bad, putting tiny patients at ease, Jeff Seiger, dental student at Fairleigh Dickinson University in Hackensack, N. J. reported.

He recommended the dentists learn how to make a cotton ball disappear and with it, anxiety and fear. Dentists were advised to go to any magic or novelty store for how-to-do-it books and materials needed for feats of sleight of hand.

Dr. Ronald Goldstein from Emory University School of Dentistry in Atlanta, Ga., reported on esthetic dentistry, describing new ways to achieve a sexy smile.

"When crowning or bonding front teeth, for cosmetic or functional purposes, dentists can dramatically change your ability to have a sexually-appealing, turn-on smile," he said.

"The prettiest face will never survive an ugly smile. But an enhanced smile will invariably do something for the plainest face."

He is past president of the American Academy of Esthetic Dentistry.

"It is possible for a team consisting of a general dentist, orthodontist and cosmotologist to get results that mean the patient doesn't have to resort to plastic surgery," he said.

The meteoric rise in gold prices has caused only a slight impact on the cost of dental restorative treatment with gold, Dr. Chester J. Gibson of McMinnville, Ore., said. The use of gold constitutes only a small part of the overall restorative dental treatment.

He said, by the way, that dental fee increases have consistently stayed below the cost of living increases over the last 12 years.

All out there with dental bill pains in the pocketbook may not believe that. But Gibson's say-so is based on Consumer Price Index statistics.

Space age gifts for dentistry were described by Dr. Jacob I. Trombka, NASA senior scientist and co-investigator for several of the Apollo missions.

Consider the lixiscope — a hand-operated battery run X-ray that appears extremely well-adapted for use during root canal treatment.

The dentist can see exactly what's happening as it happens.

He said another camera-like instrument has been adapted to take pictures and hook up to a computerized modelling system to be used for monitoring dental procedures.

Dr. Loren Pilling said toothaches, dissatisfactin with dentures, pain and other symptoms of the mouth and face frequently are caused by emotional problems such as anxiety and depression.

Pilling, a psychiatrist at the Minneapolis Clinic of Psychiatry and Neurology and a Director of the Minneapolis Pain Clinic and Pain Rehabilitation Center, said the argument over whether pain is organic or psychogenic is senseless.

Psychologic forces are always present when there is pain, he said. That's why, he said, dentists need to have an understanding of their patients as total persons.

Wisdom teeth, even impacted ones, sometimes can be repositioned with orthodontic teatment to fill critical gaps left by missing back molars, Dr. John R. Frick of Chapel Hill, N. C. said.

Frick said teeth in upper and lower jaws form the equivalent of two brick arches. If one brick is removed or severly chipped the entire arch falls apart. That is why missing, injured and malformed teeth must be restored, he said.

"Sometimes conditions are good for closing molar spaces with nearby wisdom teeth and-or other teeth," he said.

"Restoring an area with natural teeth has the obvious advantage of eliminating the problem rather than treating it with an artificial bridge."

He told of a patient who could not be fitted with a tooth-saving bridge, because there was nothing to anchor the bridge to.

Impacted wisdom teeth were uncovered surgically, repositioned as substitutes for two back molars and used to anchor the bridgework.

At a recent three day conference on nothing but wisdom teeth, specialists at the National Institutes of Health tended to agree that if wisdom teeth are not causing trouble, dentists should leave them alone.

Your biochemistry, can predict how you will respond to dental treatment, Dr. Emanuel Cheraskin, professor emeritus at the University of Alabama's Medical Center, said. For example:

—Slight variations in blood sugar levels will result in reduced tolerance to orthodontic bands and cleaning of teeth.

—The closer your blood sugar is to normal levels, the greater your chances for tolerance of dental treatment.

Half a tooth is better than none said Dr. George Feldman, of New York. He described a method of dividing a molar so that each half, with its own root support, can function as an independent single-rooted tooth.

This can be done, he said, when only one root of a three root tooth is affected by bone loss in periodontal disease — the prime cause of premature loss of teeth.

The "condemned root" is removed and the remaining two get root canal therapy. Then, separate crowns are fashioned, one for each root. They are cemented on posts sunk in the stubs of the roots after the canal work.

Each half, with its own root support, will function as an independent single rooted tooth, Feldman said.

Dr. Julius N. Obin, of New York University's Department of Periodontics, said there is no scientific evidence that surgical elimination of pockets of infection, the end result of gum disease, will prevent the disease from continuing.

He said, however, that many patients appear to improve on treatment with baking soda or salt, and short-term use of antibiotics.

Obin stressed keeping the tooth clean, brushing all the way to the root every day. Keep bacteria off the tooth.

Adults continue to opt for braces and make up about 30 to 40 percent of his practice, said Dr. Irving Skolnick.

The clinical professor of orthodontics at New York University Dental School said the improvement of the adult self-image after orthodonture can be more dramatic than that of a child.

"I have watched adults who were shy, timid, introverted, suddenly blossom into radiant, self-confident individuals," he said.

Two out of three North Americans who will seek dental care in the next year have something in their medical history that could complicate dental treatment.

This finding of a recent survey of 3,000 dental patients underscores the need for people to inform their dentist of any chronic health conditions, past serious illnesses and current medications.

Dr. Barbara J. Steinberg, of Philadelphia, said if your dentist does not take a health history, make it a point to inform him of anything unusual in your medical background.

"In addition, people should always tell their dentist if they are taking medication," she said. "The dentist must always be informed, for example, if the patient is taking steroids or anticoagulants — blood thinners.

Diabetes, allergies, certain heart problems, hypertension and rheumatic heart disease are among, many health conditions that require special attention in dental treatment.

A patient who has rheumatic heart disease or an artificial heart valve may need to take antibiotics. Patients on steroids may need to have dosage adjusted.

Dr. T. H. Shipman, from the University of Tennessee in Memphis, had words for denture wearers. He said dentures become loose and lose their stablity due to a natural loss of the supporting jawbone structure.

He recommended these steps to help cut down bone loss and keep tissues upon which dentures rest healthy and strong:

—Eat a well balanced diet to help minimize bone loss and increase tolerance of soft tissue to the denture.

—Have checkups once a year at least.

—Chew straight up and down, placing equal weight on both sides of the jaw. Food should be divided equally between the right and left side and the patient should chew with both sides simultaneously.

Tomatoes indoors? Sure

A dozen tomato seeds sown before or on New Year's Day will produce early fruits indoors if you have a slightly heated sunporch, a sun lounge, or a room having one whole wall of glass blocks facing south or thereabouts.

A regular greenhouse with frostfree conditions will also be suited for growing a few earlies, with the advantage of overhead daylight to give results a little more easily than the other methods.

Still, the challenge is worth taking. First, an early-fruiting variety must be chosen, one having fruit of small to medium size. Suggested are Stokesalaska, with small, wellflavored fruits; Fireball and Coldset having five- to six-ounce fruits; Ultra Girl with seven- to eight-ounce fruits; and an old reliable favorite Best-of-All which is good indoors and in the garden (in summer), a medium size with wellflavored tomato. You may have one of these varieties already on hand from last year's sowing. If the seeds were kept in a cool, dry place they are viable (usable) for three to four years.

Sowing 12 seeds is suggested so that the earliest and strongest can be selected for growing on. Sow the seeds evenly spaced around the outer edge of a five-inch pot of sandy compost.

Put the pot (soil pre-dampened all through before sowing) into a plastic bag closed at the top with a tie. A deep bag with a slender stick of wood upright in the centre to prevent bag from collapsing is ideal as a mini greenhouse. It need not be entirely airless, just closed to maintain a steady moisture and temperature.

Remove weakest seedlings if noticed as they appear, but remember germination may not be 100 per cent. Open bag top when seeds have germinated, three to six days according to temperature, and gradually roll bag down on outside to allow direct daylight and more air, but no drafts and no high heat.

Just as the first true leaves are seen emerging between the two narrow seed leaves, is the best time to move the seedlings each into its own three-inch pot of compost, with a little sand to keep it open and a small stone or two (or pieces of broken clay pot, or broken brick) over the bottom holes. This allows excess water to run through without clogging the holes with soil.

There should be no wilting of the chosen seedlings after moving. Keep them out of direct sunshine for a few days and don't overwater. The soil should be pre-dampened all through before putting in the seedlings.

As the seedlings spend the following three or four weeks developing slowly into sturdy dark green little plants, there will be the chance to decide where you will keep the six-inch pots or tubs they will be growing in for the next four to five months. And how many will you have space for?

During these months, the tomato plants will be flowering, setting fruits, and ripening, all the while depending on your care in providing the needed light, warmth, moisture and ventilation for a successful crop of vine ripened fruits.

When fruit forms with your help by tapping the stems as the flowers are fully open, you begin to see results.

Is there a way to guarantee safety in 'adventure'? Courts to decide

By MEGAN ROSENFELD
Washington Post

Everyone said he was special.

David Schwimmer wrote to his parents in October, 1977, when he was a freshman at Duke University. "I feel like I have so much going on inside of me that I should write a little bit, and out of that feeling comes this letter.

"Beginning with this summer I felt that I was starting to learn an awful lot, if only the pieces would fall in place, learning about what I'd like to do after I get out of school, what I want from school, what my friends are for, what it's like to love someone and not be possessive.

"(A friend) asked me the other night what I wanted out of life, and I said, I want to be happy. I want to live in a place that has lots and lots of space around it, like the moors or the mountains or by the sea, and get married and have lots of children and cats, and grow a lot of my own food, and work at a job that I feel is necessary and good. Which leaves me with the point of how do I get there from here, and where is there?"

At 18, David Schwimmer was an achiever. In high school he had a grade-point average of 95; he won the top Latin prize in his home state of North Carolina; he was named Most Valuable Player in the cross-country track team. He tutored inner-city kids; he wrote poetry; he liked to stay up late talking; he could sing songs for hours on a hike in the woods.

He carried battered Bible

He carried tattered Bible he'd won in grade school, and was studying classical Hebrew so that he could understand what he read better.

He hadn't figured out what he wanted to do with his talents: Be a veterinarian? Go to med school? Be a writer?

He decided to take a semester off and go on an ocean-kayaking course given by Outward Bound, the famous wilderness school offering physical challenge, adventure and a chance for introspection.

"Don't worry about the risks and dangers involved in O.B. and hitch-hiking," he wrote that December. "Especially you, Momma. You see, I know them, I'm not trying to hide them from myself, but they're part of what I have to do. Don't ask me why. But if I can't follow my own heart, what can I follow. . . . I'll be home soon."

David never came home. He and two other young Outward Bound students, Tim Breidegam and Brenda Herman, drowned in the wind-whipped waters off the desolate coast of the Baja peninsula. David's body has never been found.

His parents, and Breidegam's parents, have filed a $2 million lawsuit against the school, charging negligence and failure to provide "adequate supervision, leadership, basic skills, training, weather information, safety procedures, equipment or rescue aid."

Outward Bound is a "wilderness school," an idea imported from Britain in 1962. Its goals — building self-confidence and skills through stressful physical challenges — have been warmly embraced by thousands who have taken the standard 23-day course, particularly the prep-school circuit in which it got its start. A national organization with seven schools, its influence permeates the rapidly growing outdoor movement.

Fifteen people have died in Outward Bound courses in this country since 1964, according to the school's records, and one died last summer on an Outward Bound course in Canada. One other lawsuit, charging negligence in the death of Sonya Ross in 1977, is also pending, and at least four other suits have been settled out of court, one after a jury finding in favor of Outward Bound was overturned by the Oregon Supreme Court.

Negligence denied

Outward Bound denies negligence. Its spokesmen will not discuss incidents involved in litigation, on the advice of their lawyers and their insurance company. But with every death — with, in the careful language of their safety reports, every "program related problem" or "near-miss" — the same dilemma is presented: How much safety must an "adventure" program guarantee?

The questions is asked repestedly — by outward bound officials, by the families and by the others who survived a gruelling 15-hour nightmare clinging to one kayak in the Gulf of California.

A tribe so rough and tough
That they went to sea in plastic boats
And didn't even stop to take any votes."

The "terrible tribe," as one of them — Keith Trider — described the group in an exuberant and occasionally profane piece of doggerel, consisted of 11 people — nine students and two instructors. They all met in Outward Bound's camp in Loreto, Mexico and were driven in trucks to the first place they camped, about 60 miles away, along with another group of nine students who formed a separate kayak team.

They moved camp every two to four days, spending the days learning to snorkel, fish and kayak. For the course's standard three-day "solos" (in which each student remains alone in the wild), they were encouraged to fast. They all did, and David Schwimmer, for one, decided to spend the time naked, presumably to get as close to nature as possible.

The two groups set out the morning of Jan. 24 for the final expedition, the most rigorous section of the course. They were to kayak in the ocean for about 20 miles in five days, gradually working their way back to Loreto, without instructors. As required by Outward Bound procedures, the instructors were to check their progress at predetermined points at least every 24 hours.

The two groups of nine operated separately. The weather that morning seemed fine. "The water was like glass," Trider said. It was about 8 a.m. when they set out; they weren't allowed to wear watches, and guessed the time by the position of the sun or moon.

One group turns back

One group turned back after about 20 minutes when one member decided on her own that the waves were getting too rough. Operating under group rule, her colleagues had to return with her.

But the group David Schwimmer was in, for which Keith Trider was the student leader, forged ahead.

There were six kayaks: Brenda Herman and David shared one; Tim Breidigam and Catherine Mouseley, a 32-year-old graphics designer from New York, shared another. David Reed, a 20-year-old student from Dallas, shared a kayak with BeeBee Foster, now a student at Skidmore College. Trider was in a single, as were DelRene Davis, now DelRene Eallenberg, a nurse in Olympia, Wash. and Jana Ankrum, now in the Peace Corps. From their individual recollections and a letter from Ankrum, the following description of the accident emerges:

After they had been out for about 45 minutes, the wind picked up. Trider called for the members of the group to gather together. They decided to try to get around the next point, Punta Pulpito — figuring that once past it, they would find a more protected bay and sandy beaches on which to land.

By that time the other group had returned to shore, some made camp and two went to find the instructors. They had no idea, one of them said, that David's group was in trouble or that a storm was blowing up. Upon reaching the instructors, they were told either to portage (carry) the kayaks across the rough terrain of Punta Pulpito, or to try the ocean again. Then the instructors apparently sailed in a motorized sailboat throught the same waters in which David's group was starting to have trouble, but according to David's parents, later interviews with the members of the other group, the instructors did not look for their son's group. No effort to summon help was made until later.

Struggle to 'raft up'

Meanwhile the sea was getting choppier and David's group was trying to get together. Tim and Catherine's kayak capsized. The group struggled to "raft up," the safety procedure they had practised. The idea was to hold all the kayaks together while some people tried to bail out the capsized vessel and upright it.

The wind was blowing stronger, kicking up waves. Then a wave that rebounded off the rocky coast, gathering force, swamped them all.

The "raft" broke apart. David and Brenda's kayak shot off in one direction; Jana's in another. Keith capsized. They struggled to regroup. The others yelled at Jana and at David and Brenda to continue toward shore and find the instructors and get them to sail their motorized boat out to rescue them. Jana, who eventually reached the shore alone, and the others thought David and Brenda had done just that.

The others ditched all but one of the remaining kayaks. According to some of the survivors, they sank; others said they were swept away. David Reed and Beebee Foster managed to stay in theirs and the four remaining students clung to it.

Catherine and DelRene hung onto the front, attempting to paddle and kick in the direction of the shore. Keith and Tim were in back, keith trying to kick and hold onto Tim, who seemed to be having trouble.

"It was hard to hang on," Keith Trider recalled. "When the water was just swells it wasn't too hard, but the waves rebounding off the rock would put you under the water. You'd have a chance to spit out the water and go a little further before the next one hit you. . . .

"You lost all sense of time, you were just constantly kicking. Within an hour I thought I wasn't going to make it."

There was some discussion — shouted in between waves — of ditching the kayak and trying to swim to shore; Trider said they should hang on to the kayak that was afloat.

Tim was getting weak. He had been shaking. He didn't seem to see right. He was cold and only occasionally lucid.

Kicking and spitting

Hours passed. About 12 hours, passed largely in silence, each person kicking and paddling and spitting out water and wondering if they would make it.

At one point, DelRene remembers, Tim said "maybe they'll dedicate the yearbook to me at school." She was getting badly chafed by the life jacket and thinking about sharks. Beebee was crying. The waves were as high as 15 feet; the winds 25 to 30 miles an hour.

Keith kept having to shake Tim to make him spit out the water. It got dark. For the first time Catherine began to wonder if she was going to make it. David Reed, in the kayak, felt cold and cramped, "kind of like you're tearing your insides up."

David Reed tried to give the top of his wet suit to Tim, but "he didn't even know what it was."

The moon came up, appearing suddenly from behind a huge wave. "It was a scary sight, all of a sudden. His (Tim's) eyes opened up real big. He panicked all of a sudden."

A new wave hit and Tim swallowed a lot of water. "By the time we (he) give him mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, he seemed to be just filled with water," Keith said. "He wasn't spitting out anymore."

David Reed and Keith hauled Tim up onto the kayak, and tried to press water out of him and give him mouth-to-mouth resuscitation. They knew he was dead. DelRene heard Keith yell, "Tim's gone," but she thought he meant Tim had lost consciousness, and yelled back that Keith should try to keep Tim's face out of the water, to hang on, because they would be safe soon.

They could see the shore at this point. It was clear that if they didn't get there soon, they'd be swept back into the main channel and it would be all over. Keith and David held onto Tim's body for about an hour. The girls said they should hang onto the body, it was important.

Both Keith and David Reed remember distinctly making the decision — independently — to let Tim's body go. Each says, "I let him go."

'Kind of a blur....'

His body was numb from the waist down. "It's kind of a blur after that.... I was starting to accept the fact I was going to die, . . . I was kind of proud of myself that I had been able to think about it rationally without yelling and screaming and everything. I knew when I was going to die I would just fall asleep from exhaustion, so it probably wouldn't be that bad."

Keith, on the other hand, had decided he was going to live. "I would have hung on to that SOB for three days if I'd had to."

In an hour, (two hours?), the remaining five survivors reached a rocky shore, the waves pulling and pushing them against the rocks, each one eventually able to grab on and collapse.

They could barely stand, The rest of the night they spent huddled together under the one soggy sleeping bag that had been retrieved from the shattered kayaks. The only food was a single orange salvaged from the same boat.

They woke up at dawn — "the most beautiful sunrise" — and for the first time got a good look at what lay ahead: a high cliff, which they estimated at about 200 feet. Aching, hungry, barely dry, they scaled the rocks and started to walk. They walked all day, across terrain described by the school director in his letter to the Schwimmers as "Sonoran Desert region, semi-arid, with cactus, brush, and occasional small trees. Water is very scarce and occurs only at a few settled or frequented points."

The first night they all lay down in a small depression and covered themselves with the one sleeping bag, "like five bones," Trider said. The next day they set out again, "walking like 90-year-olds," their mouths swollen from the salt water, their tongues sticking to the roofs of their mouths.

They still had not seen Jana, who made her way back to camp alone.

Later that day they sighted a Mexican fishing boat off the coast, and hailed it with the sleeping bag. The fishermen took them to another fishermen's camp in their boat full of dead sharks. From there they were driven back to the base camp and then to Loreto.

Coast Guard log obtained

According to the Coast Guard log which David's father, George Schwimmer, obtained through a Freedom of Information request (after the intervention of North Carolina's Sen. Robert Morgan), the Southwest Outward Bound School was first notified that there had been an accident through a message left with its answering service at about 9 p.m. on Thursday, Jan. 26. Still unknown are the actions of the group's instructors, Larry Campbell and Elmo Crow, between the time the two groups left before 8 a.m. Tuesday and about 11 a.m. Thursday, when the harbor master in Loreto was notified. SWOB refused to say where the men are now.

Since the only phone in Loreto was in a tire store that was closed at night, communication with the outside world was hampered.

Friday morning, David and Brenda's kayak was found at the north end of Coronados Island. On Saturday Brenda and Tim's bodies were found on Carmen Island.

The Coast Guard called off its search on Feb. 1, 1978, according to its files. According to the log, the search was discontinued the afternoon of Jan. 30.

WESTHAMPTON BEACH, N.Y. (UPI) — The wooden cargo schooner John S. Leavitt was supposed to start a rebirth of America's romantic wind-powered shipping industry. It foundered in heavy seas Thursday on its maiden voyage hauling lumber to Haiti.

Air National Guard helicopters plucked the nine-member crew from the twin-masted ship as it took on water in 20-foot-high waves in the Atlantic Ocean and flew them to Suffolk County Airport Thursday night. None of the crew needed medical attention.

Modelled after 19th-century ships, the vessel was powered by wind pressing against canvas sail rigged on 25-metre masts. With no engines, its only fuel requirement was a small amount of diesel oil needed for pumps, generators and hydraulic cargo hoists.

The Leavitt's cargo capacity was 150 tons, the equivalent of five semi-trailer truckloads.

Ned Ackerman, the 37-year-old captain and owner of the 148-foot vessel, said the boat was on its maiden commercial voyage from Quincy, Mass., when it began taking on water about 280 miles southeast of New York's Long Island.

Ackerman said he had hoped the John S. Leavitt, which he spent four years building, would launch a rebirth of America's romantic wind-powered shipping industry.

"This boat was a manifestation of a dream," he said. "It hurts."

A Coast Guard cutter sailed out of left Boston late Thursday to assess whether the ship, which had not sunk, could be saved. Ackerman said that because of the 75 to 80 tons of lumber cargo aboard he believes that it might not sink.

The trouble-plagued ship, named after a Connecticut writer and artist, was launched with extensive media coverage Aug. 8 in Thomaston, Maine.

Court has 1069's number

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The number 1069 is not acceptable, but One Zero Six Nine might be all right, the Minnesota Supreme Court ruled today in denying a Minneapolis man's legal bid to be named a number.

Michael Herbert Dengler, a former social studies teacher, has been calling himself 1069 for five years, saying the numerals have "personal significance" and relate to his philosophy of life.

He got his bank, the Social Security Administration and several state agencies to recognize him as 1069, which he pronounces as One Zero Six Nine.

But a utility company and the Minnesota Drivers' Licence Division wouldn't go along unless the numeral had court approval, and two years ago Dengler filed suit seeking a legal name change. Two years before that, he was rebuffed by the North Dakota Supreme Court.

In its unanimous ruling, the Minnesota Supreme Court said Dengler is free to call himself 1069 as a common-law right, but noted the U.S. social and economic system is geared to identifying individuals by letters rather than numbers.

"If he chooses to adopt a name which simply subjects himself to contempt, ridicule and inconvenience, he has a common-law and statutory right to do so," said Justice James Otis for the Supreme Court.

The court upheld a February, 1978, decision by District Court Judge Donald Barbeau, who said it would be "dehumanizing" for any person to be known only by number. The judge likened it to the numbers tattooed on prisoners in Second World War concentration camps.

To allow a legal name change to a number "would hasten the day in which we all become lost in a faceless number," Barbeau said.

Dengler, divorced with two children living with their mother, is described in court records as a U.S. citizen, born in Germany. He was not available for comment on today's ruling.

In arguments before Barbeau in October, 1977, Dengler's lawyer, Stefan Tolin, said his client lost his teaching job in Fargo, N.D., because of the name issue. Since then, Dengler, who at the time of the arguments was working as a cook in a Minneapolis restaurant, had applied for jobs in economics and banking, but had been summarily rejected because he called himself 1069, Tolin said.

Funeral potlatch moose fair game to transport

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (Reuter) — Alaska's Supreme Court, in a precedent-setting decision on the religious rights of native cultures, has reversed the conviction of an Indian who transported a moose out of season for use in a sacred ritual.

Likening ceremonial moose meat to sacramental wine, the court said Athabascan Indian Carlos Frank, a tribal chief in Minto, Alaska, had exercised his constitutional freedom of religion by transporting the moose to a funeral potlatch — a centuries-old religious ceremony.

"The Athabascans believe that the funeral potlatch is the last meal shared by the living with the deceased," the court said in announcing its recent decision.

"While moose itself is not sacred, it is needed for proper observance of a sacred ritual," the court added.

Michigan court hits all ship sewage

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — A ship cannot discharge sewage — whether treated or not — into Michigan waters, the state Supreme Court ruled Thursday.

A spokesman for the state department of natural resources said the decision may clear the way to enforce laws against sewage discharge by commercial ships — laws set aside for years during court fights.

In a unanimous ruling, the high court reversed decisions by Mackinac County circuit court and the state court of appeals.

The challenge to the Michigan law was launched in 1971 by several federally-licensed commercial ship owners and the lake carriers association. The Canadian Dominion Marine Association joined the case in 1976.

Ship industry gets 6-month reprieve

The 20 per cent subsidy for the Canadian shipbuilding industry due to expire on New Year's Eve, has been extended another six months, Defence Minister Allan McKinnon said today.

At the Clark cabinet's final meeting about 10 days ago, an order-in-council was passed which extends the program to June 30. If the Tories are re-elected on Feb. 18, McKinnon said further consideration will be given then to another extension.

"It's very important to B.C.," the minister said in an interview.

"We'd like to see the industry stand on its own feet in international trade, but a lot of their competitors are being subsidized by their governments," he said.

"It's hard to compete against Japan and countries like that — Taiwan. Britain has almost gone out of the business.

"I think it's important to keep the West Coast shipbuilding industry."

The subsidy program was instituted several years ago by the Trudeau government, and was due to run out in Febrary this year, but at that time then-finance minister Jean Chretien announced an initial extension to Dec. 31.

The open-ended subsidy program applies to any new vessel construction in Canadian shipyards, or to extensive repairs to existing ships.

McKinnon also hinted at a further boost to the shipbuilding industry. A proposal may soon be sent to the cabinet's treasury board for a commitment to the Delex program — Destroyer Life Extension — where several hundred million dollars would be spent to upgrade the obsolete Canadian destroyer fleet.

"It's tied in with the frigate program," he said, referring to plans to build new navy vessels. The defence department still hasn't decided how many current destroyers should be "delexed" — whether 16 or a dozen or only 10 — but "now's the time to co-ordinate the two programs," he said.

"I don't want to 'delex' any more than we have to but I don't want to end up with a 10-ship navy either," said McKinnon. "Delexing" would add about 10 years to the life of a destroyer, he explained.

Don Challinor, general manager of the Victoria yard of Burrard-Yarrows, welcomed the news of the subsidy extension.

"It gives us a stay of execution, as it were."

There are 4,000 people working in the industry on this coast, half of them at Burrard-Yarrows, and without the subsidy few of them would be working today, he said.

McKinnon and Challinor couldn't say exactly how much money has been spent by Ottawa on the subsidy, but Challinor said it runs into "millions and millions of dollars" for his company.

He said the subsidy started out as a way of supporting Canadian shipyards while giving them an incentive to improve their productivity.

"It hasn't worked out that way," Challinor said.

Three per cent of the subsidy money is held in reserve and paid out only when the shipbuilder spends an equivalent amount of money on upgrading his shipyard.

Shipbuilders still need the subsidy to compete against foreign shipyards which are also subsidized by their governments.

Trudeau buying $300,000 home

MONTREAL (CP) — The president of a Montreal real estate company says Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau is involved in a deal to buy a house high on the southern slope of Mount Royal and valued at more than $300,000.

But if the deal goes ahead, Trudeau won't move in until 1983. The house, built by architect Ernest Cormier in 1931 and considered a masterpiece of Art Deco style, would be rented out to somebody else while it awaits the Liberal leader's arrival.

Frank Norman, head of Frank Norman Co. Ltd., said Thursday: "I've checked with Mr. Trudeau, and he has entered into a conditional agreement to buy the house.

"We are undertaking to place a tenant in it for three years. Just one tenant. It's a private home. To be accurate, it will be leased for three years. The agreement is subject to the architect's approval."

Cormier, now aged in his 90s, is the architect who designed the Supreme Court of Canada building in Ottawa, the main building of the University of Montreal, and the bas-reliefs on seven silver-plated nickel doors donated by Canada for the United Nations building in New York City.

The Art Deco home is the only house in the province classified complete with certain furnishings as a historic monument by the Quebec department of cultural affairs.

Norman said the asking price a year ago was "close to half a million dollars," but he refused to discuss the current selling price.

In September, playwright Jacques Beyderwellen, the present owner, was asking $325,000.

Even if the Liberals win the Feb. 18 election, the purchase appears to underline the promise Trudeau made to his three young children to move to Montreal. He has said he would form a government if the Grits win in February, but would eventually arrange a leadership convention with a view to retiring from politics in a couple of years.

"It was rather obvious that he loved the house," Norman said. "He couldn't use it right away, but he bought it with the idea of placing a tenant."

Real estate agent Alyce Lalonde said movie star Genevieve Bujold called on Christmas Day to say she was interested in buying the place, but Trudeau had already taken it.

The house has a 30 by 20 foot reception room with a 25-foot ceiling. It has a terrace overlooking the city, and a library with shelves installed by Cormier and dominated by huge bronze columns and a stylized stone carving above the fireplace.

Among other Cormier-designed furnishings are a 108-inch table in walnut root and macassar ebony, an octagonal table in Italian marble which is finished in black and gold, and a long circular staircase which leads down from a tower past lower floors to a basement garage.

Another flight of stairs leads to the guest wing and out to the "French-style garden" where there is a fountain. The wine cellar is built into the slope of the property.

"You need a certain lifestyle and a certain life to live in a house like that," said Ms. Lalonde.

Storm pounds Britain

LONDON (UPI) — A deadly storm bringing hurricane-force winds and torrential rain pounded Britain's Atlantic seaboard Thursday, inundating scores of towns and villages in the worst flooding in 20 years, driving thousands from their homes and disrupting shipping and communications.

At least nine people were reported dead and one missing an feared dead.

Two old people died under a wall of water from a flooded brook that crashed down a mountain side and sent 10 feet of water smashing through a row of houses in Merthyr Tydfill in Wales.

Two girls and a man were killed by 78-mph winds that swept their car off a coastal road near Milton in the southern county of Hampshire. A tree blown down by the gale struck and killed a passing motorcyclist in Exeter City.

Flooding that police called the worst since 1959 covered 12 counties in Wales and western England. South Wales was "utterly awash" and conditions in Devon and Cornwall were "diabolical and getting worse."

Gold hits $516

LONDON (AP) — Gold bullion soared to $516.00 U.S. ($593 Cdn.) a troy ounce in London and Zurich today.

But unlike Thursday when gold's advance sent the U.S. dollar reeling, the U.S. currency was steady to slightly higher on most European foreign exchanges.

Gold had surged $39 in Zurich Thursday from pre-holiday prices, closing at $514.00 an ounce and touching record $518.50, in trading.

Monthly bus pass soon?

Monthly bus passes now sold in Kelowna may be the model for a bus pass for all B.C. transit systems, according to the Urban Transit Authority.

The UTA says in the December issue of its newsletter, Commuta, that Kelowna's pass "may become the model of a system to be introduced in other communities throughout the province."

Riders pay $18 a month for a pass permitting travel anywhere in Kelowna's eight-bus system, or $13 for a single-zone pass.

The Kelowna experiment began as a six-month pilot project in the summer of 1978. Besides the monthly passes, riders can also buy a $1 daily pass (75 cents for children) or a $7 book of tickets which can be used at any time in place of the regular fare.

Daily passes are bought direct from the driver and can be used by more than one person. The ticket books and monthly passes must be purchased from city hall or other retail outlets.

"The daily pass program is the most successful of the three experiments introduced by Kelowna transit," says the UTA. "The numbers of passes sold have increased considerably over the past year, especially during the summer months."

The passes could be in more general use in 1980 in other B.C. bus systems. UTA transit planner Denny Grimmer said Thursday a north-central B.C. community has already followed Kelowna's example.

But riders of the province's major bus networks in Victoria and Vancouver will have to wait at least until April when the regional districts assume responsibility for transit planning and financing.

Grimmer explained that fare-setting is the sole prerogative of the municipalities and regional districts responsible for planning and paying for the buses, but until formal authority passes from B.C. Hydro to the Capital Regional District on April 1, no decisions can be made.

Bus passes are a high priority with Mayor Bill Tindall, the city's representative on the UTA board of directors.

He said during the civic election campaign in November that he envisioned a monthly pass for the Victoria region costing about $20.

Kabul coup grim reminder of Prague pistol-whipping

Times News Services

Die-hard supporters of executed Afghan President Hafizullah Amin were reported trading rifle fire in Kabul today after Russian forces installed their own man in power to end a 19-month-old insurrection on the Soviet Union's southern border. The border guerrillas vowed to fight on.

There were signs the new leader, Babrak Karmal — described by Western sources as a Soviet stooge — will conduct large-scale purges.

Britain and West Germany condemned the Soviet involvement. A U.S. official called it "the grossest form of international behavior."

Meanwhile, the the Kremlin acknowledged for the first time today its military role in the upheaval in neighboring Afghanistan in a statement that bore striking similarities to Moscow's justification for its 1968 invasion of Czechoslovakia and occupation of its capital, Prague.

"It was the largest Soviet troop movement outside Eastern Europe since the Second World War," one source said of the influx of Russian soldiers. "You can see it almost as a Soviet invasion of Afghanistan."

The official Tass news agency quoted Kabul Radio as saying the Afghan government "made a pressing appeal to the U.S.S.R. for urgent political, moral and economic assistance, including military aid," and that the Russians "satisfied the request of the Afghan side" under the terms of a U.S.S.R.-Afghanistan friendship treaty signed Dec. 5, 1978.

A report from the Japanese embassy in Kabul said sporadic shots were heard near the road running from the Soviet embassy to the old royal palace which appeared to be still in the hands of Amin's followers. Several MiG-21 planes circled over the city, the report said.

Islamic rebels, who fought Amin, denounced Soviet influence in Afghanistan and vowed to continue their war [illegible] establishing a non-Marxist government in Kabul.

The rebels view any Marxist government as a threat to the Moslem beliefs held by most Afghanis.

Both Moscow and the Marxist government in Kabul, the Afghan capital, claim the Moslem rebels in Afghanistan's civil war are backed by Pakistan, China and the United States.

The Kabul airport was believed closed, so there was no immediate way for correspondents to confirm reports of active Russian fighting to take over the presidential palace and radio station Thursday night.

Hope for crewmen dwindles

Times News Services

KETCHIKAN, Alaska — An elite U.S. navy diving team accompanied by a Chinese interpreter today set sail in a Coast Guard cutter in the stormy North Pacific in an attempt to reach the overturned freighter Lee Wang Zin and determine if any of its crew is still alive.

Cmdr. Bob Bornholdt, diving officer for the Navy's Pacific Fleet, said his 30-man team will bang on the hull of the capsized, 15,000-ton freighter and look through porthole windows to see whether any of the remaining 28 Taiwanese sailors trapped inside for three days had survived in an air bubble that has kept the vessel afloat.

Bornholdt and his men set sail at daybreak in the Coast Guard cutter Laurel for the three-hour ride to the overturned freighter.

The cutter "would roll around like a watermelon" in the 15-foot seas and 40-knot winds, said a crew member.

Hopes for survival of the crew faded further Thursday night as the air bubble keeping the ship afloat grew smaller.

The ship is reported settling lower in the water and leaking diesel fuel.

High winds have hit the area, and a storm is approaching. Winds are expected to remain strong, the National Weather Service said.

U.S. Coast Guard Cmdr. Ray Spoltman, federal on-scene co-ordinator, said the grounding of the freighter Thursday makes it easier for the divers to approach from calmer water on the vessel's lee side.

"The chance of surviving in this water [illegible] minutes to an hour and a half," Spoltman said. "If there are air pockets, they (the crew) will be suffering from exposure.

"It's doubtful anyone can be alive. As time increases, it's becoming more remote we'll find anyone alive."

"Seas are breaking over the bow and stern," said Coast Guard Petty Officer Phillip Franklin. "She is aground on rocks about one-half mile from Kendrick Island," 40 miles southwest of Ketchikan.

Although beginning to lean, none of the vessel's deck was visible above the water, he said.

The bodies of two sailors were recovered floating near the ship, but the rest of the Taiwanese crew, including its registered captain, Hsu Pei Chieh, were thought to be inside the freighter.

Bornholdt, who flew over the ship in an effort to determine whether it could be entered by divers, reported that there was "not much bubble" left to keep it afloat. The vessel was settling lower in the sea, he said.

At last it's getting better for lifetime asbestos worker

By PAT DUFOUR

Frank Morgan has spent 35 years working with potentially deadly asbestos. In that time, he's seen two co-workers die of lung cancer.

But now, thanks to increasing safety regulations, he feels he works in the best environment he's ever known.

Morgan, 67, has worked in both civilian industry and the ship repair unit of CFB Esquimalt.

Like many others, Morgan for years smeared his face with vaseline while on the job so that the fibres would cling to his skin, lowering the risk of them being inhaled and reaching his lungs.

Always safety-conscious, he's enthusiastic over the intensified safety program that the ship repair unit put into effect in January.

Getting ready to work in the engine room of the destroyer-escort HMCS Yukon on Thursday, he showed the Times new fool-proof suits used by workers in the unit.

They work in two-layer suits, breathing clean fresh air pumped in before starting on the job. When the job is completed the outer layer is taken off, put into plastic bags and never used again.

Ed Stephenson, group manager and chairman of the unit's asbestos control committee which is composed of both union and management personnel, explained that it was only in the early 1970s that people began to be concerned about the health hazard of working with asbestos and its environmental impact.

"Up until then, asbestosis was considered an acceptable hazard, like black lung with coal mining," he said, "We really hadn't got a handle on the environment."

He and safety officer Paul Severny visited the United States' naval yard in Philadelphia in June and the new suits are just one of the safety steps that resulted from that visit.

Another step has been routine checking of workers exposed to asbestos by the department of national health and welfare for asbestos fibre counts. The Defence Research Establishment Pacific in the dockyard is now preparing to take over the monitoring and testing of about 1,000 workers.

The ship repair unit will also acquire an extraction system, which Stephenson described as "a big giant vacuum cleaner with an absolute filtration system."

In the old days when dockyard workers were aboard ships, working with asbestos, insulating boilers, steam pipes, hot water pipes and other areas, the ships' ventilation systems were on, allowing the potentially dangerous fibres to be airborne throughout the vessels. Now the ventilation systems are shut down to reduce the risk of exposure.

Disposal of waste asbestos was also casual.

Plans call for the gradual replacement of asbestos with a less harmful combination of fiberglass and calcium silicate.

As Morgan put it, "This is the best place in which I ever worked."

Covers on cakes thwart forlorn bird in bakery window

A Victoria pigeon spent the holidays in a warm, dry place but he was glad to be out of there Thursday morning after a couple of days without food or water.

Bakery owner Tim Waddell on Monday noticed several pigeons trying to get in the back door of the Lillian West bakery at 773 Fort, attracted by the warmth and aroma of fresh baking.

He shooed them away but one got in undetected and spent Christmas and Boxing Day inside, upstairs in the shop window.

But any hopes of a feast were a pigeon-style illusion. Most fresh baked goods had been sold by Monday. Only wrapped and covered Christmas cakes and the like were left in the window.

The bird was a curiosity and a conversation piece in the bakery window during the holidays, until Waddell liberated it Thursday morning.

At least two Langford residents are concerned that sloppy work by enumerators may deprive them of their votes in the Feb. 18 federal election.

Mr. and Mrs Fred Boulter, 808 Brook, are still angry at being denied their vote in the May 22 election.

Boulter had spent all that morning working as a scrutineer in Gordon United Church.

Boulter says people were able to come in and vote, even if they were not on the list, after they had given their names and addresses.

It was a different story, however, when he and his wife went to register their own votes at the Royal Canadian Legion on Station Road.

They took their counterfoils that the enumerator had given them only to find they had been left off the list through some error.

The Boulters really got their dander up when they were told the only way they could vote was to go to the Duncan election headquarters.

Defeat of the Tory government has cost Victoria returning officer Malcolm Anderson two months in sunny Africa.

As one of Canada's 282 federal ROs, Anderson has to gird up for the general election Feb. 18 and will be unable to join observers from 10 Commonwealth nations chosen to oversee the Rhodesian election.

"I was hoping the rebels might have carried on a little longer," he quipped.

Anderson was one of three Canadian returning officers picked to help ensure an orderly election Feb. 27-29 of a new Rhodesian government.

For 15 years Jason Goldenknive, 32, has been running for himself.

Now he thinks it's time he ran for the needy, and on New Year's Day he'll pound the pavement in an effort to cover 38 miles between Duncan and Victoria.

The heavy equipment operator, ex-disc jockey and musician said he's been running since high school days, runs 1½ miles to and from work and can go five miles without trouble, although he has run 20 miles at a stretch within the past few years.

"I was thinking of volunteering, like for the Boys' Club, but that wouldn't work out too well with my job. Now I'm laid off I'd like to do something for children and need a sponsor to give the proceeds to needy families."

Goldenknive is asking donors to pledge cash for every mile completed in his super-marathon Tuesday. St. Vincent de Paul has agreed to disburse the money, but time is short and Goldenknive still needs a third party — like a bank — to be the collector.

Services of a bank or other acceptable organization to receive donations may be offered through St. Vincent de Paul Society treasurer, G.F. Cox, 3919 Onyx, 477-4619.

Mrs. Tedford, 1470 Dallas Rd., found a six-inch amber glass ball in her driveway after a stormy night.

The Tedfords are ardent beachcombers, but this is the first time they've found a Japanese glass fishing ball in this area. Neighbors say they can't remember ever seeing one before.

Crown counsel Don Laughton and lawyer Martha McNeely were struggling with the court calendar to fix a date for a provincial court hearing early in the New Year.

McNeely pointed out to Judge Fred Green that two weeks in January had been set aside for the trials of accused in the second large scale narcotic case arising out of the surveillance and arrest of a ship off the west coast of Vancouver Island, referred to in the courts as Tofino II.

Remarked Green: "If you ever have a Tofino III you'll wreak havoc with these courts."

Mad dogs and Englishmen go out in the midday sun;

The Japanese don't care to, the Chinese wouldn't dare to;

Hindus and Argentines sleep firmly from twelve to one,

But Englishmen detest a siesta.

One has to wonder what Noel Coward would have written if he had witnessed a group of Dutchmen plunging into Beaver Lake in freezing weather. And if he were alive, he could see just such a scene at 2 p.m. New Year's Day.

It will be the fifth annual polar bear dip for the hardy members of the Netherlands Association, but the ice-breaking that characterized last year's swim isn't expected to be needed this year.

But association director Ken Van Gylswyk says the lake will be cold enough to provide a real challenge — especially to the timid.

It's impossible to assume from this activity that the whole world's mad. While about 1,500 or so make their way out to the lake every New Year's Day, only about 50 actually take the plunge.

Psychic power is the latest tool being used by Richard Renaud in his search for his missing doberman Cleo, who was stolen from his car outside McDonald's on Oct. 18.

After advertising in newspapers and on radio and distributing flyers with his pet's description on them, Renaud appealed to Town Talk.

The result was a series of phone offering help or one of them from a woman with psychic power who said she had seen the dog in her mind in Tillicum Park.

She is now trying to zero in on the house where the dog is being kept.

Instant joy was registered this week when Rhoda Thomas, who is retiring after 22 years with the Greater Victoria Public Library, was honored by the library board.

A bookmender by trade, she was given an impressive volume.

"It's beautiful . . . and it's laminated!" said Rhoda, instantly recognizing the quality.

At the same ceremony, Peggy Anderson was honored on her retirement after 30 years. She was assistant head of the circulation department.

Four youths hunted

Security at the Victoria Youth Detention Home will be tightened after five inmates — all boys — fled from their escorts on special Christmas outings Thursday night.

Four were still at large today.

Del Phillips, director of the home at 1125 Pembroke, said further outings and activities planned for the inmates over the holiday period will be curtailed.

One returned to the detention centre about an hour later.

Two other juveniles, part of a group of four attending a movie in downtown Victoria, escaped in a car which pulled up as they were stopping at McDonalds on Pandora for a snack.

Phillips said all of the escapers were 14 to 15, two had been sentenced to periods of confinement and the other three were on remand awaiting trial.

Hold-up nets $100

City police are searching for a slim, knife-wielding bandit who held up a small grocery store at Fairfield and Vancouver Thursday night.

A police spokesman said the man, wearing a nylon stocking over his face, walked into the store at 8:55 p.m. and ordered the proprietor to hand over the money in the till, about $100, before fleeing west on Fairfield.

The suspect was described as about six feet tall, slim and wearing a blue kangaroo top without a hood and blue jeans.

Dog pierced by arrow

Saanich police and the SPCA are investigating the bow-and-arrow shooting of a dog Thursday on a Cordova Bay beach.

Tom Honkainmaa, 4999 Cordova Bay Road, said today his nine-month-old Malamute-German Shepherd cross is recuperating at a Langford veterinary hospital.

She was shot through the chest with a razor sharp arrow from a bow believed similar to those used for deer hunting on the Saanich Peninsula.

Hankainmaa said the vet told him his pet will live but will be lame the rest of her life.

The incident occurred about 4:30 p.m. while the dog was playing on the beach near Honkainmaa's home.

A Saanich police spokesman said he isn't aware of any other pet shootings but said bow hunting is popular in the area.

Hankainmaa described his dog Koba as a "playful harmless puppy" and said he couldn't believe it when the animal staggered through his door with an arrow poking out its chest.

"If the dog is a nuisance there are easier ways of getting rid of it, like throwing rocks or calling the SPCA," he said.

Shooting of pets is illegal under the Cruelty to Animals Act and conviction carries a small fine.

Deadly canine virus in B.C.

A deadly canine intestinal virus first detected in the United States 18 months ago has been found in dogs in B.C.

U.S. reports say the virus can kill dogs within two days of their exposure, but the strain found in B.C. does not appear to be as virulent.

Dr. Cleve Cunningham, assistant director of the provincial veterinary laboratory in Abbotsford, told the Times several cases have been detected since summer in the Vancouver area and Fraser Valley. He said a kennel in Prince George had an outbreak and lost a portion of its younger dogs.

There have been no cases reported on Vancouver Island.

The virus, belonging to the parvo family of viruses, causes acute hemorrhagic gastroenteritis. Infected dogs bleed internally, and suffer violent diarrhea and vomiting.

Veterinarians have not developed a vaccine for it and there is disagreement over where the virus came from.

Some experts feel it is a mutant of feline panoleukopenia, the virus that causes distemper in cats.

But Cunningham doesn't agree. He said there is no evidence of cross-pathogenicity of cat and dog viruses.

Cunningham said the number of cases has fallen off since summer. There was one reported in November, but none this month.

$90,000 computer blaze

More than $90,000 damage was done when fire broke out in a computer in the basement of a house at 2523 Asquith Thursday night.

The computer, desks, filing cabinets and a copying machine owned by the Ambulance Employees Union pension trustees were destroyed.

A fire department spokesman said Mrs. Leo McArdle, whose husband is chairman of the trustees and uses the basement as his office, smelled smoke shortly before 7 p.m. and when she went to investigate saw sparks coming from the computer.

By the time firemen arrived flames had broken through to the main floor of the two-storey house. It took three hours to extinguish the blaze.

Fire officials said about $26,000 damage was done to the house and McArdle estimated the damage to the computer and office equipment at about $65,000.

An electrical fire early today did about $1,000 damage to the millwright shop at B.C. Forest Products, 371 Gorge East.

Meanwhile, H.B. Duke, owner of a house at 1611 Myrtle where there was a shed fire Wednesday night, denied the fire was caused by hot ashes placed in a box as reported in the Times Thursday.

Duke said the origin of the fire, which caused about $3,200 damage, is still under question.

Duke said his daughter, Madeline, who rents the house from him, had told firemen she had removed ashes from the fireplace earlier in the day but had placed them in a composte heap.

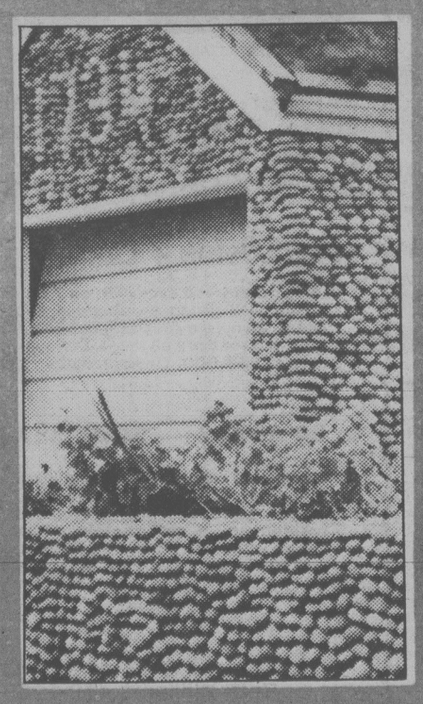
HOMES TODAY

Norwegian style sod roof and stone walls



When they built the stone wall and garage at their home on the corner of Robertson and Hollywood Crescent in 1958, Andrew and Margarete Gilstein had no idea that they were creating something that would make friends for them from all over the world.

They hauled smooth, rounded rocks from beaches between Victoria and Sooke because, though their 1924-built home is only minutes from the waterfront, the beach there is solid rock.

Then, five inches of dirt was put on the roof and grass was planted, as well as spring hyacinths and scillas.

The Gilsteins have goats on their garage roof, but these ones don't eat grass, unlike those in the rural areas of Norway, where people used to put the agile animals to crop each spring (no explanation available as to how they put them there). These goats were painted on canvas by Margarete, and glued to wood.

The grass is simply allowed to grow, and is not cut at all. Apparently there are no problems with the rain washing the sod away because the roots hold it and it looks after itself.

Tourists and locals alike are fascinated with the Gilsteins' approach to exterior decor, and people from all over the world have taken pictures and stopped to chat. Many have been taken through the house, and have later become friends.

According to Andrew, who came to Canada in 1930, became a barber, and stood behind a chair for forty years, Norwegians are starting to use sod roofs on modern houses, because it insulates so well.

Send for plans to make these wooden toys that "do something"

YOU CAN MAKE IT!

By STEVE ELLINGSON

Many readers have written us for more do-it-yourself toy projects. It seems that toys for tots are getting so elaborate these days that it takes a big chunk out of the checkbook to keep the junior members of the family well-stocked at gift-giving time.

It wouldn't be a bad idea for our slick modern society to go back to the basics: a simple, timeless toy design that has delighted countless generations of children . . . the pull toy.

Here is a whole menagerie of little animals, every one a childhood favorite. When pulled along the floor, each one does something. For example: the rabbit hops, the horse gallops, the seal balances the ball and so forth.

Even the most inexperienced amateur can build these little toys with our full-size pattern. Just trace the animal's features on the wood, then paint right over the tracings. Each pattern gives complete directions. Simple hand tools are all you need.

To obtain the full-size patterns No. C-1 for making all the toys pictured, send $3.00 (please add fifty cents extra for postage and handling) by cheque or money order to:

Nippon China collecting and glassware as art

COLLECTIBLES

By JOHN HEARN

T.W. of Victoria asks if Nippon is the same as Occupied Japan. Is one more valuable than the other, and which would be best to collect?

That's a lot of question. Some of the answer lies in fact and the rest in opinion. The fact part is that Nippon is most certainly not the same as Occupied Japan.

The only thing they have in common is that both names denote a certain period of Japanese chinaware exports — but they were fifty years apart.

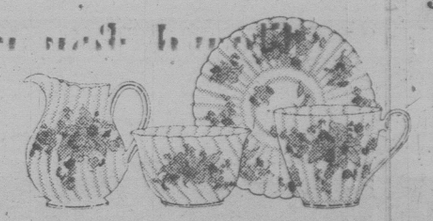
1891 is a very important year for collectors of china and porcelain. That was when an Act of Congress in the U.S. required that every piece coming into the country had to be marked with the place of origin. Japanese manufacturers chose the name Nippon which they continued to use until 1921 when American law required them to mark their wares Japan.

After World War II Japanese manufacturers exported a great deal of chinaware which was marked Occupied Japan from 1945 until, I believe, 1951.

So much for the facts. Is one more valuable and which would be best to collect are matters of opinion. On the face of it, Nippon is infinitely more collectible. It is much more expensive — which is presumably what most people mean by valuable — and is generally much superior in workmanship.

Occupied Japan on the other hand looks like what it is, a mass-produced cheap line turned out in a great hurry to earn foreign trade dollars. I find it hard to take Occupied Japan seriously — a fact which has brought me angry letters from O.J. enthusiasts before and doubtless will again.

Despite its obvious superiority it is hard to take Nippon seriously either. The entire line might be dismissed as mere reproductions of Limoges, Royal Bayreuth, Wedgwood, Royal Worcester, Spode and other leading European potters. Mind you they are splendid reproductions and no more blameworthy than the reproductions of Japanese pottery by Chantilly, Chelsea, Meissen, etc., etc.



Nippon was made strictly for export. The same manufacturers doubtless continued to make authentic Japanese pots, dishes, plates, etc. for home consumption which, so far as I know do not command the same high prices here.

What I am saying, I think, is that I see little merit in mere imitation. Around the turn of the century European artists were much influenced by Japanese styles but what came out of that influence was entirely their own. Merely to copy has no more to be said for it than any other fake.

June Whitall of Guelph asks what is considered collectible in fine glassware.

This is one of those questions which lends itself to all kinds of answers and offers a useful contrast to the Nippon enquiry. By fine, I take it, Ms. Whitall is referring to art glass as opposed to pressed glass, and art glass is virtually any piece individually made by a glass blower. This means that regardless of artistic merit you are talking about originals. No two pieces can be exactly alike. Glass blowers like potters are part craftsman, part artist. There is an enormous amount of chemistry involved, ideal temperatures, ideal cooling conditions; not one ideal but many according to the results you are trying to achieve. Without technology there will not be a good piece but mere technology alone produces nothing of value. The rest is art.

It is fascinating to watch a glass maker at work just as it is fascinating to watch anyone who is giving 100% concentration to any task in hand. He works with a kind of swift deliberation. One false move and he will reduce the piece to a blob of molten glass and start all over again.

The great glass makers of the past did much the same thing.

When you buy art glass you are buying art. You can play safe and buy known works of recognized masters and pay a great deal of money or you can patronize a contemporary glass maker at lower prices and hope for a killing a few decades later. Either way you will be acquiring treasures.

Handle with care.

"WONDER WHO LIVES THERE?"

This is where Victoria's Smile Show man lives: Jerry Gosley's home is 63 steps up a steep cliff

BY ANNE SWANNELL

Perched right on top of the cliff overlooking Gonzales Bay is, viewed from the outside, an unimposing green-shingled house. It was built in 1912, and though it looks tiny from Beach Drive far below, it consists of three bedrooms, one of which has the best view of the water in Victoria, bathroom with dressing room three-steps-up-and-round-the-corner, separate "loo", several hallways and niches, a den, dining/sitting room, kitchen, and a back storage/utility room.

This is where veteran comedian Jerry Gosley, who originated The Smile Show when he was in the RAF in 1941, lives with his corgi dogs and his memorabilia of nearly forty years in show business.

Like Jerry, the house is getting a bit weather-worn, but, also like Jerry, it's creatively very interesting. It doesn't follow conventional rules of behaviour; its rooms meander up, down, and around on four levels, and the inventive way that cupboards, benches, and steps were built over hunks of rock which were never blasted out is obviously the work of an inventive mind.

Gosley's Smile Show went on the road in 1943, when he was stationed at Patricia Bay. He took his troup to Korea in 1952 to entertain the Canadian forces there, and he's been on the move ever since, from one theatre to another; always it's the call of the stage that beckons him on, whether it's a benefit performance for a hospital or a newly choreographed routine for summer theatre-goers.

His many connections over the years have resulted in a melange of reminders of things he's done and places he's been; photographs, sculptures, dolls, posters, hangings, and paintings. The things he treasures most are those that were given to him as momentos.

Behind the bathroom door is an old cardboard store-front poster; a cut-out figure of a Schweppes gentleman in a business suit, swinging along carrying a briefcase. One doesn't see him until one is inside with the door shut, which is somewhat disconcerting the first time it happens.

Every painting but one in Jerry's house is an original. His collection ranges from Emily Sartain to Herbert Seibner and Maxwell Bates.

A painting by Jim Merrill at the foot of the stairs prompts Jerry to give you "a tour of his life", with his marriage, children, and stage career symbolized in cloud-like swirls of red and white.

Jerry just came back from a trip to Antigua, where he bought Christmas presents such as cloth dolls made by the Indians, and towels and wash-cloths from El Salvador which are so colourful and beautifully designed that he has had two of the towels made into cushions, and plans on framing the wash cloths as gifts.

Jerry doesn't like bedrooms to look "bedroomy" so the ones in his house don't. They all look like sitting rooms, some with day beds, his own with hide-a-beds that are chesterfields by day, become full-sized beds for sleeping. The advantage of this sort of treatment is that he opens up all the doors so cast parties, other large gatherings just "over-flow" from room to room, as the space is required.

Everywhere you look in this house, there's something interesting, and everything has a story behind it, so that a "Tell me about the...." starts off a tale about some event that happened on the way to something else, or about a person he once knew who...., and so on.

There's a five-octave piano, and a gong that's worn thin as paper, a ship's lantern, and a carved oak settee that may be three hundred years old. There's a foot-tall cactus that grew from a piece Jerry picked up on the desert once and brought home to son Tim because it looked like a foot. There are Japanese fish-net floats, a god's-eye weaving, and pewter mugs. They all have their stories, and they are all a part of a life whose memories are treasured by the man who has made his home high on a hill overlooking The Pacific thousands of miles from his Yorkshire birthplace.

Building a fire takes know-how, practice

Like any other achievement, building a good fireplace takes practice — along with some basic knowledge, best acquired now so you'll be ready to create a satisfying blaze when the first cold snap comes. The Fireplace Institute offers this quick lesson in wood-burning to help you become a master fire-builder:

● Fire requires just three things — air, fuel and heat. Wood is a favorite fuel for fireplace fires, but all wood is not alike. Different species of wood have different compositions which affect the way they burn. Hardwoods like oak, maple, birch and hickory burn longer with a minimum of smoke. Softwoods — pine, spruce or fir — burn hot and fast, sometimes too fast for safety. They're best used as kindling or combined with harder woods. Remember that the moisture content of wood affects the way it burns. Choose only well seasoned wood that's best left to dry for at least six months, preferably a year or two.

● Laying a successful fire involves proper combination of air and fuel. Positioning the logs to create drafts helps them continue to burn once they're ignited. Placing the logs on a grate elevates them from the fire-box floor and provides better air circulation.

● Experts say three to four logs make a good fire. First to be placed is the "back log," a log larger than the rest. It goes on the grate at the back of the fire chamber. The back log will radiate heat into the room while providing a heat source to keep the other logs burning brightly.

● Next, place a log in front of the back log and lay kindling in between. Twists of newspaper, dry twigs or pieces of dry scrap lumber make good kindling — use enough to give the fire a good start, then add two or three logs over and around [illegible]

● Make sure the damper is open before lighting the kindling — an important safety step. When the kindling is ignited, heat rises and gets forced into the narrow space between the logs. This concentration of hot air produces temperatures hot enough to keep the fire going.

● Several fire starting implements are available from fireplace shops. Gas lighters provide a steady flame until logs ignite. A tray that contains fuel and slides under the logs can also be used as a substitute for kindling.

Tips for selecting fuelwood

Those who buy fuelwood from a dealer should shop around. The price of fuelwood depends on the type of wood (hardwood generally costs more but burns longer). You'll pay top prices for fruitwoods but may feel their marvelous aromas are worth it. Most dealers offer stacks of mixed wood.

Wood is most commonly sold by the cord, a neatly piled stack of logs. A standard cord measures 8'x4'x4', although some dealers sell wood by the face cord, which is 8'x4' but only as deep as the length of the logs. "Stove cords," "pick-up cords," and "fireplace cords" are other terms you may encounter.

Firewood is also sold by weight or by the bundle, with no set rules for the size of a bundle. Because of these variations, be sure to ask exactly how much wood is in the pile when comparing prices.

Another hint: straight pices of wood of various sizes give the greatest amount of solid wood per cord. Ask dealers if the price includes delivery and stacking; you may save money if you do these chores yourself.

There are two kinds of wood: hardwoods like oak, ash, hickory and maple, which come from trees that lose their leaves in the fall, and softwoods, from evergreens. Hardwoods make preferred fuel because they burn longer with a minimum of smoke, while softwoods ignite and burn quickly, producing possibly too-hot fires.

Another problem with resinous softwoods is the creosote desposits they leave in the chimney. (Thick layers of this residue can ignite). Softwoods are best used for kindling or mixed with harder woods. If hardwood is't available where you live, remember that burning softwood requires more conscientiouschimney maintenance.

For economy's sake, choose the densest species of wood. They offer more pounds of wood, and therefore more wood energy per cord. Among hardwoods, the densest include oak, beech, maple, hickory and birch; the denser softwoods include longleaf pine, Douglas fir and Eastern red cedar.

Wood that's properly seasoned burns more safely and efficiently because of its lower moisture content. You can tell seasoned wood by the cracks in the grain and the hollow ringing sound produced when two logs are clapped together. And to keep the damp out, store firewood in a dry place, elevated from the ground.

Why Work Street ?

Work Street, in the Hillside area, was name[illegible] for an Irishman who joined the Hudson's Bay Co. [illegible]n 1814. The name was originally Wark, but it was pro[illegible]bunced Work, and soon became spelled that way als[illegible]

John Work rose steadily in the company's [illegible]ervice, taking charge of Fort Simpson in 1838, and ev[illegible]ntually became a Chief Factor. He and his wife, [illegible]Josette Legace, had eleven children.

In the early 1850's, he came to Victoria to [illegible]tire at "Hillside Farm" where he grew prize pumpk[illegible]hs, and from whence he walked to town each day to c[illegible]at with cronies. Though retired, he took an active in [illegible]rest in the affairs of the community, and was elect[illegible]to the legislative assembley.

John Work lived to be 70, and Mrs. Work t[illegible]be 87, advanced ages for the time in which they li[illegible]d. She died in 1896 at "Hillside Farm".

Why Johnson Street?

Historians cannot agree for whom Johnson Street and its bridge were named.

One group says it was named for Cmdr. Charles Richardson Johnson, RN, and the other for Dr. George Johnstone of the Hudson's Bay Company. However, down through the years the spelling has remained Johnson.

ANKA'S AWAY — This is not really a trivia question, but where can I write to Paul Anka. It's important. — Linda Krauss, Duluth, Minn.

And this is not really just a trivia column. So I'll tell you that your favorite former teen idol can be reached at The Norman Weiss Co., 9200 Sunset Blvd., Suite 818, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. They handle Anka and can forward the letter. You'll be unhappy to learn that Anka recently suffered an accident on stage, tearing ligaments in his ankle during a show at Lake Tahoe. But he's expected to be up and around in a few weeks.
